defining a hero

When others were basting turkeys or glued to televised football games over holiday break, I began working on this magazine. I started by pouring over words written by two SMU alums – a soldier stationed in Iraq and a Holocaust survivor.

Though their experiences are worlds and decades apart, they share an ironic commonality in the horrors they have seen.

Their experiences left me humbled. Their reflections haunted me, but their stories have inspired me.

Because of them, as my family gathered through the holidays, I wanted to hug my daughter a little tighter, and I felt compelled to continue praying silently after the standard Lord's Prayer at our dinner table.

I accepted the position of director of communication on the Winona campus at Saint Mary's in October. (Bob Conover, former magazine editor, has been named vice president for communication and marketing and is focusing on raising the university's overall public visibility.) One of my first major realizations was that the Saint Mary's community is filled with countless heroes. Some are obvious, the ones who make headlines. Others blend into their surroundings, quietly working behind the scenes. Some have dedicated their lives; others have given a spare hour or two.

I was asked last fall to calculate the number of volunteer hours on this campus and soon discovered the impossibility of this task. Hundreds of students, alumni, faculty and staff are striving to make the world a better place. And they don't count hours.

Whether they're protecting our country, helping feed our area's needy families, holding blood drives and clothing drives, tutoring area children, or building houses for Habitat for Humanity, they're all heroes.

I believe they're all proof that at Saint Mary's we're teaching minds and touching hearts.

In this magazine, we present many heroes.

■ The word "athlete" doesn't begin to describe Matt Guzik '81 and Joe Guenther '98. Both men participated in Ironman Hawaii, the world's most grueling triathlon, on Oct. 18.

In addition, Guzik competes to raise money for charity. His efforts have raised nearly $500,000 for Montana charities. One of his causes is the Greater Ravalli Foundation, which provides financial assistance for children and the community. During Ironman Hawaii, he set his sights on $1,000 per Ironman mile.

■ Saint Mary's University freshman hockey goalie Justin Simmons '06 has been deaf since the age of 18 months, when spinal meningitis cost him his hearing. But the obstacle hasn't kept him from making a name for himself at the collegiate – and world – level.

■ Sgt. Ryan Patrick Hinton '00, chaplain assistant for the 101st Airborne Division, has kept detailed journals of his experiences in Iraq, which he openly shares with us in this edition. His duties take him to mass gravesites – one of the hardest things he has had to face as a soldier.

He writes: "I hope when people read my entries they get a truer sense of what happened here; the news is tainted as am I, but blended together maybe, just maybe, they will see what is happening over here."

■ George Levy Mueller '53 recounts his memories of the Holocaust in the book, "Lucie's Hope," which begins with a heartbreaking memory of his mother putting her two children, George, then 8, and Ursula, then 3, on a train out of Germany during World War II. They would never see her again as she died in a concentration camp shortly before its liberation. By the ages of 8 and 15, George and Ursula were in the midst of the worst horrors of the concentration camp Bergen-Belsen. Two survivors of the war, they still faced a lifetime of psychological challenges. Mueller's son calls him an American success story. His daughters call him a hero. 📖

Great job on Fall magazine

Hey, great job on this most recent Saint Mary's Magazine! I especially liked the articles on San Miguel School and on Shane Whaley ... good photos, good layout, good everything! I read it, honestly, from cover to cover. It only saddens me that I find my own class way, way down the list from the most recent classes — and that I sometimes need my glasses to get through all that fine print!

— Brother Robert Smith, FSC, '76

Mother grateful for compassion shown at SMU

I am sending you this note because I would be remiss if I didn't. I believe it is so important for you to know about the experience that my family has encountered over the last several weeks and months. It involves members of the SMU community and I am so proud to be able to say ... "I am a part of that community."

Last June my husband and I were asked to be a part of the "Parent Panel" during the summer orientation of new students and their parents. Since we have two students on campus, Rob, a senior, and Aubrey, a sophomore, we decided that we had enough experience and could give some practical advice to these families. As I was listening to various key people speak during the orientation sessions, I remember hearing about how interested and "vested" the entire faculty was in our children. I didn't doubt it then ... and I never could now.

In late August my mom was diagnosed with cancer of the liver. The news was devastating to us and the most difficult part was going to be telling our "college-bound" kids ... who had incidentally just moved back to campus days before. They, of course, took the news very hard and were trying to balance between the rigors of a new semester and the desire to spend time with their grandma.

I sent two e-mails to people who I thought were significant to my children, dean Julie Thornton and coach Nick Whaley. I simply asked for them to keep an "eye" on Rob and Aubrey ... it would be out-of-character for them to miss classes or other campus related activities, and I would be concerned if they started to do just that.

Within hours of my sending those two e-mails, my children were at their grandmother's hospital bedside. They were told that "family" was important, that they should be with them whenever they could. They were told that it wasn't just about missing classes and deadlines, it was about being where they needed to be.

Because of the reassurance that Julie and Nick gave to my kids, they felt very comfortable in their decisions to spend time with their grandma in the last few weeks of her life.

My mom took the hand of Christ on Thursday, Oct. 16, and she was enveloped in love by her family including her grandchildren ... it could not have been more perfect. They had the opportunity to spend quality time and speak to her from their hearts.

'Looking Back' photo stirs memories

What a surprise I got as I turned to page 35 of the current Saint Mary's alumni magazine. The photo was taken in July of 1959 at Lake Itasca, Minn. It is one of 30 or so photos I have, recording the events that took place on an extended field trip organized by Brother Charles. What a great time we had. Thirteen brothers, all biology teachers from the various Christian Brother schools, met for a week of instruction and planning on the SMC campus. We then followed the Mississippi River up to the Twin Cities, and on to central Minnesota, Itasca, Ely, Duluth, Superior, Escanaba, and back to campus.

We camped and stayed in cheap motels, brought all our dip nets, waders, binoculars, microscopes etc. We had a great time studying local flora and fauna, investigating lakes and streams and bogs and prairies. Brother Bernard LoCoco and I were the youngest on the field trip. We had one year of teaching under our belts, and were eager to learn from the more experienced Brothers, as well as from Charlie and George. It was the trip of a lifetime for us.

Identifying the picture in 'Looking Back'

Today the Saint Mary's Magazine for Fall 2003 arrived. On page 35, you asked for some information regarding a picture in "Looking Back."

I am Clement J. Caponi, class of 1953. At the time of the picture, I was a Christian Brother with the name of Brother Hermeus Michael. The picture was taken July-August 1959. Brother Charles Severin organized an NSF Grant for a group of Brothers who taught biology in the Brothers' schools. The course took us up to Ely, Minn., and the headwaters of the Mississippi in Itasca State Park.

In the picture on page 35, the person you identified as Brother Charles is really another biologist whom you should know; namely, Brother George Pahl. Moving to the right are myself and Brother James Bernard, who is now ex-Brother, Bernard Dansart, class of 1955. The two Brothers who are squatting are Brother John Pahl (but I do not know his status right now) and Brother Thomas Powers who is still a Brother and lives in the Chicago area. To the far right, you have correctly identified Brother Bernard LoCoco of the class of 1958.

As usual, my wife and I enjoyed reading the magazine and learning more about Saint Mary's.

– Mike Caponi '53

EDITOR'S NOTE: Caponi also shared two additional photos. View them and his comments at www.smumn.edu/magazine.

Husband had fond memories of Brother Charles

Thank you for sending me the fall issue of Saint Mary's Magazine. The picture of Brother Charles brought back memories of my husband, Alvin Diming '41, and his admiration for Brother Charles under whom he studied biology. Al died in May 1998, but he often spoke of his years at Saint Mary's and, especially, his biology classes.

I am sending you Brother Charles' biology textbook. It is the only textbook Al ever saved, and I always hesitated to get rid of it. Maybe you can add it to your archives.

I especially like the explanation of the butterfly symbol on the page facing the table of contents. It is worth repeating in some future article on Brother Charles. I had no idea the butterfly was emblematic of the human soul or that the Greeks called the human soul and the butterfly by the same name, psyche. Note also Brother Charles' summary of his book on page 379. Here was a teacher who combined his Christianity and his scholarship seamlessly.

– Ellen Mercer Diming

SMU helps local families in need

SMU, other partners, assist more than 1,400 families through Gifts for Winona

More than 423 families – totaling 1,465 people – had a happier holiday season through the Gifts for Winona program this year.

Gifts for Winona, which provides gifts for less fortunate Winona-area families, was developed last year by a committee of Saint Mary's faculty and staff, as an opportunity for the university to meet a need in the community.

Saint Mary's University was joined again by Winona Volunteer Services and United Way of the Greater Winona Area in sponsoring the program. They additionally welcomed two new sponsors this year, Wells Fargo Bank and Winona Radio.

An abundance of SMU faculty and staff volunteered to make the program run smoothly. Letters were sent to sponsoring organizations, a database was kept of all families in need, cards detailing gift ideas were placed on giving trees, gifts were transported and wrapped, additional gifts were purchased from donations, and all presents were distributed in time for the holidays.

According to Cindy Marek, vice president for financial affairs, "Many volunteers at Saint Mary's University have once again provided time, talent and funding to assist their neighbors in need through Gifts for Winona. This year almost 1,500 people had a brighter holiday through the program. Gifts for Winona is a true reflection of Saint Mary's Lasallian tradition and I'm proud to be a part of it. Thank you to all the Saint Mary's employees who participated."

Students held several other campus fundraisers this year, with proceeds benefiting the community. Penny was raised money for Habitat for Humanity, and a Common Threads clothing drive raised money for Winona Volunteer Services and the Salvation Army.

SMU assists with 'free store' website

Dr. Chad Kjorlien, director of instructional technology at Saint Mary's, has been working with the Winona Area Poverty Roundtable web sub-committee over the past year to help the group communicate with the public.

The Free Store, a virtual warehouse, has been set up for Winona-area residents to exchange reusable home, garden or garage items, at www.winonashares.org. The site also hosts a directory of area local human service agencies and related news, such as Gifts for Winona.

The site is a way to pair those who want to give items with those in need. And, as there are no facilities in Winona able to showcase larger items, like furniture, it fills a need that hasn't been met. In October, the average visits to the website daily numbered 150, and in November, it received 355 visits per day. A large percentage of the items that have been listed have been exchanged.

The project was made a reality by the work of the SMU Informational Technology Department. SMU hosts the site on its server. A number of community leaders have played a crucial role in the website development as well.

Saint Mary's Student Senate makes donation for food baskets

The student senate at Saint Mary's University did its part to help less fortunate families celebrate a happy Thanksgiving.

The student senate donated a check for $1,500 to Winona Volunteer Services to be used for its Thanksgiving basket preparation.

The money was gathered through donation canisters and laundry machines on the Saint Mary's campus. According to Sandra Burke '81, executive director of Winona Volunteer Services, the money was used to purchase additional food for the holiday, beyond what is handed out at the food shelf. An average of 431 families per month use the food shelf service.

Burke said in years past, approximately 100-150 meal baskets were prepared for families during Thanksgiving. "Last year we made 175, so we're really doubling the output, trying to give those on the food shelf some additional food for the holiday."

She ordered 400 turkeys, 400 pumpkin pies as well as green beans, french fried onions and soup, mandarin oranges and orange Jello-O™ and potatoes.

The baskets went out to area families on Nov. 20. The money from Saint Mary's Student Senate, she said, was used to help cover the food expenses not covered by the Channel One Food Bank of Minnesota.

Graduate and special programs

Total Saint Mary's enrollment recently inched over the 5,000 mark, mainly due to the growth of the university's graduate and special programs.

About 1,360 students are enrolled in the undergraduate College at the Winona campus, while the university now counts more than 3,650 adult learners in the School of Graduate and Special Programs.

The history of the School of Graduate and Special Programs parallels the dynamic growth experienced by the university

While many universities are just beginning to invest in similar programs for adult learners, Saint Mary's celebrates nearly 20 years on its Twin Cities campus and 60 years providing master's-level programs.

The School of Graduate and Special Programs offers delivery sites and times convenient for adult learners. There are campuses and centers in Minneapolis, Apple Valley, Rochester, Winona and in Nairobi, Kenya. Courses are delivered at more than 50 schools and corporate locations in the metropolitan area, greater Minnesota and Wisconsin. Night and weekend courses are commonly available to accommodate the many students who also work full-time.

In addition to bachelor's and master's programs, Saint Mary's also offers pre-bachelor's, post-master's and certificate programs, and in 1997, the university introduced its first doctoral program, the Doctor of Education in Leadership.

Saint Mary's University has long played a vital role in higher education in the state of Minnesota. With a strong undergraduate foundation, the university was able to expand its offerings to meet a more diverse population with new educational goals. According to Brother President Louis DeThomasis, FSC, "Our expanded programming for adult learners is a logical extension of our Lasallian mission — we bring education to the people, when and where they need it. The programs also have a significant positive impact on the university's finances."

The university remains dedicated to its mission of advancing the educational and career goals of today's students. And it is now carrying out that mission by serving the needs of more than 5,000 students.

Introducing the 'MBA reinvented' in the Twin Cities

There's a new MBA program on the horizon, and it will be different from any MBA program currently offered in the Twin Cities metro area.

Saint Mary's University of Minnesota plans to begin offering a new MBA program in September of 2004 (pending review and registration by the Minnesota Higher Education Services Office). SMU's "PowerTrak MBA" will offer an innovative program design which integrates business ethics, international opportunities and real-world experience.

The PowerTrak design will allow students to personalize the MBA curriculum to fit their particular educational needs. Once the business core of coursework is completed, students will customize their learning experience by choosing from three options to complete the PowerTrak MBA program.

The "Specialist PowerTrak" will provide specialization in disciplines such as marketing or finance. The "Custom PowerTrak" will allow students to choose courses from other SMU business-related programs or MBA electives of professional interest. And the "Executive PowerTrak" will provide intense professional development in an executive-style cohort experience combining faculty-led and student-designed learning.

"We believe that we have reinvented the MBA, due to the PowerTrak's unique design and curricular focus," said John Pyle, Ed.D., associate vice president of Saint Mary's School of Graduate and Special Programs.

"If students need to retool, but are unable to commit to the entire MBA program, they will be able to choose our certificate options which are comprised of MBA courses," Pyle said. "This is our way of providing just-in-time education to students working in an ever-changing business environment."

Karen Gulliver, Ph.D., associate dean of international initiatives at Saint Mary's, is program director and helped develop the PowerTrak MBA. Gulliver has more than 15 years of experience in higher education in the areas of finance, economics and international business. She also served for more than 10 years as an economist for Land O' Lakes.

"We've designed this MBA program with opportunities for global experience in a real product development situation with a Fortune 500 company," Gulliver said, adding that SMU's program will be the only internationalized MBA offered in the Twin Cities metro area. Students will have an option to travel internationally as part of an actual project team for one of the nation's premier business organizations. Flexible scheduling will also make the MBA program at SMU appealing to working adults. Part-time and full-time alternatives with day, evening and weekend courses will be available.

The PowerTrak MBA, the newest addition to the variety of educational opportunities at Saint Mary's University, will provide relevant theory and practice for modern business, Pyle said. "We're pleased to bring this reinvented MBA to the Twin Cities and greater metro area," he concluded. "It will provide an exciting new option for business professionals, one with exceptional academic value."

SMU gets second NEH grant to host seminar on Russian literature

The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded SMU a $76,400 grant to repeat a summer seminar for high school teachers from June 27-29, 2004. Dr. Greg Gaut '69 (history) will lead the seminar, "Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Solovyov: Literature and Religion in Pre-Revolutionary Russia."

Several visiting scholars will contribute to the summer session including Dr. Carolyn Ayers (English), a Russian literature specialist who teaches world literature at SMU.

Full-time teachers in all American K-12 schools are eligible to apply. Fifteen teachers will be chosen.

Cooperation in education forming in China, Taiwan

An announcement was made of global educational initiatives, following November trips to Xian, China, and Taipei, Taiwan, by Brother President Louis DeThomasis, FSC, Ph.D.

Brother Louis announced in November that Saint Mary's University may be partnering with universities in both countries.

In the past, because of rigid cultural norms and strict national education laws in China, U.S. educational institutions of higher learning experienced difficulty in their efforts to form alliances. In July 2003, the national education laws changed, making it possible for foreign universities to legally enter into joint partnerships with Chinese public universities.

Northwest University, a prominent institution in North China with approximately 25,000 students, has expressed an interest in partnering with SMU to offer joint degree programs at a new campus in Hienman, China. A Memorandum of Understanding was signed with the university.

Brother Louis also visited Taipei, Taiwan. A Memorandum of Understanding was reached here as well to pursue new cooperative programs at Tamkang University, a prestigious and successful private university in Taiwan.

All developments are pending approval from university and governmental authorities.

Remick Fellowship supports teachers in Catholic schools

The Remick Fellowship Program, in its fifth year at SMU, provides support for potential and current teachers in Catholic schools. Six recipients this year are obtaining Master of Arts in Instruction or Master of Education program degrees, funded through this program.

The fellowship program in the Master of Arts in Instruction is offered to encourage teachers to work in Catholic schools. Remick Fellows are expected to teach in the Catholic schools for at least two years upon completion of their master's degrees. The Fellows for 2003-2004 are: Megan Coyle '03 of Norwood, Minn.; Colleen McGovern '03 of La Crosse, Wis.; and Janet Willis '03 of Rochester, Minn.

The fellowship program in the Master of Education encourages advancement for those currently teaching in the Catholic schools in the Diocese of Winona. This two-year program is for certified teachers who earn the master's degree while continuing regular employment as teachers. Fellows agree to continue teaching in the Catholic schools upon completion of the program. The Fellows for

MAFA brings music to less-fortunate children in Winona

Through MAFA (Music Access for All), the gift of music is made available to those who could not otherwise afford it. MAFA was organized last December by Dr. John Paulson, professor of music at Saint Mary's University, with the assistance of William Doerer of the Winona Housing and Development Authority, which serves as a home for the program. The SMU music department serves as a co-sponsor of the organization.

The purpose of the program is to provide instrumental music lessons, instruments, and sheet music to students ages 10-18 in need of financial assistance. Professional musicians from the community volunteer their time to provide instruction in piano and beginning band. Teachers in the program include program director, Paulson, band; A. Eric Heukeshoven, SMU website manager and music instructor, band; and community member Vicki Herron, piano. Students from various departments at SMU also provide assistance.

The MAFA program depends on contributions from the community to cover operating expenses, which include instrument rental, various accessories, the piano and maintenance.

2003-2004 are: LeAnn Dahle, Morristown, Minn.; Trent Robertson, Austin, Minn.; and Pamela (Cox '84) Bagniewski, Rochester, Minn.

Both programs are endowed by Mary Ann and Jack Remick of Rochester. Throughout their lives, as students in Catholic educational systems at all levels, and as parents of five children who have benefited from Catholic education, the Remicks have been moved to support the future of Catholic education.

"We want to make a positive difference in the future of the Catholic school system," Jack Remick said, "Our goal in establishing the Remick Fellows Program is to provide a vehicle to continue the excellence of teaching in the Catholic schools – by providing new teachers and encouraging those already working in our Catholic schools."

SMU receives grant to host visiting Muslim scholar

Saint Mary's was honored to host a Fulbright visiting scholar this spring thanks to a grant from Fulbright's Direct Access to the Muslim World program, administered by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars.

The purpose of the program is to enrich understanding and knowledge of Islamic, Middle Eastern and South Asian societies and cultures, and grants were specifically targeted to liberal arts colleges with limited or no current programs on the Muslim world.

Dr. Mohamed Mostafa, associate professor of political science, Cairo University in Egypt, was on campus March 4-19. He was a guest lecturer in several classes and presented on the following topics: the relationship between Islam and democracy; women in Islam; politics in Islam; peace; and the relationship of the Muslim nation with the U.S. He also made a public presentation to the Winona-area community.

A total of 487 people participated in the 16th Fall Frolic Run/Walk Oct. 4 at Saint Mary's University.

Family Weekend full of fun events

Family Weekend, held in October, was action-packed. Events included a hall vs. hall tug-of-war, the 16th annual Fall Frolic Fun Run/Walk, a parent golf outing, and musical and theatrical performances (including the play, "The House of Bernarda Alba;" Jazz Ensemble Combos; and a Concert Choir, Chamber Singers and Concert Band performance). At a community reception, students had the opportunity to introduce their families to the professors. Attendees were asked to join Brother President Louis DeThomasis and talk about life at Saint Mary's. And, to round out the weekend, a comedian/magician performed on campus, and students ran, jostled and bounced around in inflatable games.

Moody's upgrade is sign of strength

Moody's Investors Service, an international investment rating organization, has completed an extensive examination of Saint Mary's University of Minnesota – and upgraded its bond rating.

Moody's now rates Saint Mary's as "Baa1," up one level from "Baa2." Moody's report on Saint Mary's finances and overall outlook highlighted its strong operating performance, both now and into the future.

The upgrade "was most welcome and a significant objective endorsement of Saint Mary's University," according to Brother Louis DeThomasis, president.

"The university is on solid financial ground and is a good investment," Brother Louis said. "The Moody's rating shows their confidence in our soundness and viability."

Brother Louis said "what is so heartening is that we, like all higher education institutions, are financially challenged by the economy and tight budgets at the state and federal levels. In these more difficult times," Brother Louis added, "the decisions we made in the past are being rewarded by our current financial strength."

An upgraded bond rating means the university can issue bonds through the Minnesota Higher Education Facilities Authority (MHEFA) at a reduced interest rate, resulting in potential savings of hundreds of thousands of dollars.

On behalf of Saint Mary's University, MHEFA will issue $11 million in Revenue Bonds Series Five-U. The bonds will refund prior bonds issued at a higher interest rate that were used to pay for past building projects and campus renovations.

The reasons cited by Moody's for the bond rating upgrade include:

- ongoing positive operating margins, driven by stable enrollment in the university's core program offerings and revenues from non-traditional educational endeavors;
- healthy debt coverage by financial resources, resulting from modest leverage, adequate financial reserves, and healthy gift revenues;
- continued strong management, which should allow for a smooth transition between presidents in 2005.

Moody's also reported that Saint Mary's has no deferred maintenance expenses, and noted that a healthy, entrepreneurial attitude permeates the culture of the university.

A SOLDIER OF SOULS

Hinton journaled his experiences in Iraq while serving as division chaplain assistant

As far back as he can remember, Ryan Hinton '00 has always wanted to be a soldier. He recalls, as a young boy, dumping out his box of G.I. Joes™ onto the living room floor and aligning them, ready for battle. But serving in the war on Iraq is a long way from playing childhood games.

Sgt. Hinton, who served as chaplain assistant of the 101st Airborne Division, kept a journal of his experiences in Iraq during the past year. Now back in the United States, there are memories Hinton admits he may not want to remember. Yet he believes it is important to share details of war, as seen through a soldier's eyes.

"I hope when people read my entries they get a truer sense of what happened here; the news is tainted as am I, but blended together maybe, just maybe, they will see what is happening over here," he said.

Hinton, a Rhode Island native, responded openly — via e-mail from Iraq last fall and phone once he returned to the United States in December. He answered questions regarding his faith, his duties and the difficulties he has faced. He also responded to those who feel U.S. presence in Iraq is not justified.

Why did you decide to join the Army and when?

I decided to join the Army in the summer between my junior and senior years at Saint Mary's. That summer I was living in community with the Christian Brothers and wondering what I was going to do with my life when a thought of my father and his father serving in the military jumped in and stayed in my head. My parents and the Brothers have always instilled service in me, so to me there was no greater mission than service to my country.

What was the hardest adjustment for you while serving in Iraq?

The hardest adjustment has been dealing not only with the deaths of my fellow soldiers but also with the mass gravesites throughout this country. Hatred has such destructive power and it creates the deepest scars. The media back home has been so hung up on finding weapons of mass destruction, they have forgotten that thousands of innocent women and children were killed by this madman, and his foot soldiers are still taking aim at our troops as we attempt to raise the oppressed.

How do you deal with the mixed feelings both here and in Iraq about America's presence?

I have mixed feelings ... but I will say that we and I needed to be here no matter the cost; humanity — even on foreign soil — needs to be protected. We have done that and, in return, maybe we have altered the life of one potential terrorist.

It has been said that without proof that Saddam had weapons of mass destruction that this war will be proven unjust ... I do not have the luxury of pontificating that which justifies war, rather I go where and when I am asked and deal with the situations that present themselves.
R.H.

Hinton was positioned outside the building where Saddam's two sons were located in Mosul, Northern Iraq.

Part of Hinton's duties brought him to suspected mass gravesites. At one site, he found 19 bodies of adult females and three identifiable babies. Kurdish women and children Hinton discovered were killed on Saddam's command.

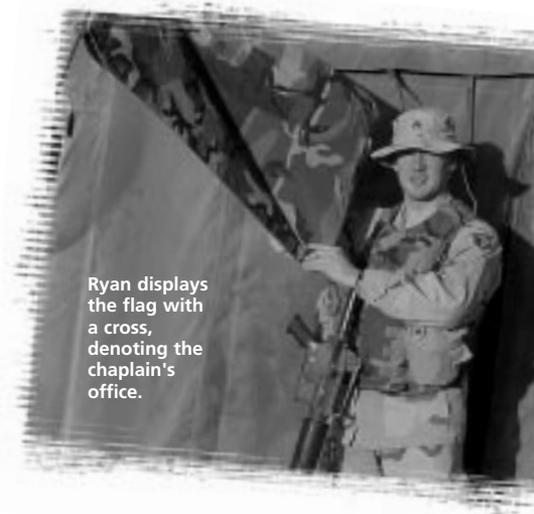

You want a weapon of mass destruction? Look no further than the man that we overthrew for power in Iraq. Saddam Hussein raped, tortured and killed thousands — if not hundreds of thousands — within his own borders. The people of this country may want us gone; they may shoot and kill us; the people of my country ... may want us gone, but there is no doubt in my mind that we did the right and just thing by coming here. There is no doubt in my mind that we stopped mass destruction, even if its methods may never appease the politicians. R.H.

Why have you kept a journal?

I kept a journal to remember the emotions of my experience. Powerful experiences need to be remembered. They are what shape our future.

What were your duties as chaplain assistant?

My duty, as the division chaplain assistant in wartime, is primarily one of security, making sure the chaplain is able to move on the battlefield without getting injured or killed. On the battlefield we are really one person; the chaplain does not carry a weapon and I do. I also direct tactical convoys and support religious activities, with set-up and over-watch security. The chaplain and assistant make up a team for spiritual support of soldiers; we pray with them and sometimes just offer a caring shoulder to lean on in times of difficulty.

Ryan displays the flag with a cross, denoting the chaplain's office.

Realize that my reflections help me deal with that which I have seen, but sometimes in life we would just like to forget ... R.H.

As a chaplain assistant, we are soldiers but we do not have offensive abilities.

In my mission of protection I cannot risk leaving my chaplain to go after the enemy, which is hard when the bullets are flying and your friends are fighting back. Soldiers are truly a band of brothers and not being directly involved in the fighting is sometimes hard. But rest assured that the fight often comes to us and we are ready and have done our duty.

Did you expect to be in a position where those close to you, perhaps yourself, face the real possibility of death?

Death is a part of life. I knew when I signed on in the Army before September 11 that evil can strike anywhere. I also knew that, as a soldier, we are at a higher risk of losing our lives, but knowing that does not always help. It is hard to have friends die and feeling like it should have been you.

Sgt. Ryan Patrick Hinton poses with area children at a first-aid site in Baghdad. Hinton was assisting with delivering humanitarian aid supplies.

After 9 months overseas, how did it feel to come home, and what are your plans for the future?

It was hard being back, a lot harder than I thought it would be. With the ongoing information coming in (of injuries and death within the 101st Airborne Division), and knowing I can't control any of it anymore.

I wanted to be a high school religion teacher when I left college and now I am planning to continue that goal.

What are your hopes now for the future of Iraq?

We've done some good things over there, and (Saddam's capture) is really the icing on the cake.

The hope is for (the people of Iraq) to experience a free government ... It helps our cause, but actually getting Saddam Hussein in custody helps the Iraqi people. In talking to people still over there via e-mail, Iraqi nationals are really excited and see this as the life blood of their new government.

Did you ever question God's plan in times of crisis, pain and suffering?

My faith in God has carried me through these experiences, most of which would have been too hard to go through alone. Of course I question God's plan but I never question that God has me on the right path; pain and suffering is part of humanity. Even the Perfection of Christ felt these things and He, in the garden, questioned. But I have found that by submitting to the Lord I have found the light in the darkness.

Today I do not have the gift of words to express the tremendous loss that I feel in my heart for these soldiers, some of whom I had known and some that I was there when they returned to our heavenly Father. I do know this fact though: I will always see their faces in the folds of our flag. — R.H.

And so I return to the routine, that which gives solace to this humble servant at this time. R.H.

This photograph of Georg and Ursula Levy is on the cover of "Lucie's Hope — Memoirs of the Holocaust" by George Levy Mueller '53 with Roslyn Z. Weedman.

Continuing, Lucie's Hope

As George Levy Mueller '53 speaks, only an occasional word or two hints at his heritage. After all these years, there isn't much left of his German or Dutch accents, but he'd likely prefer it that way.

He came to America as a teenager, putting a horrific and painful past behind him, vowing to start fresh in this new country. For many years, he lied to others about his past, wanting no one to know he was a concentration camp survivor. It wasn't until he proposed to his wife at Lake Winona that he even admitted to her that he was Jewish.

Levy Mueller said he only wanted to feel normal.

He hadn't felt normal since he was 8 years old in 1939.

"The last time I saw my mother was a cold, gray February morning in 1939, at a German railway station, I'm not even sure which one, possibly Lippstadt, my home town, or possibly Bielefeld, a neighboring town. My mother had helped my three-year-old sister, Ursula, and me pack a bag that morning as though we were going off on a little vacation to visit relatives in Holland.

"Many children waited for the train accompanied mostly by their mothers. The scene was somber, but not hysterical by any means. All these Jewish mothers were there to put their children on what came to be known as the Kindertransport, which would take a train load of children west to Rotterdam. The plan, of course, for us and I'm sure for all the kids, called for us to meet up with our mothers whenever they could take care of last-minute business and make their way to Holland.

"At the age of eight, however, I had seen some things already. I had seen our family home and businesses taken away. And I had seen my father and uncle Ludwig die after being detained for several weeks by SS soldiers. So, although I believed my mother when she said she would see us soon, I was also worried. And I had my little sister to be responsible for. I remember crying. Getting out of Germany was by now difficult and my mother was able to get us on this train through the intervention of a friend of hers with political influence. My mother, I remember, was crying and said to us, "Don't worry. I'm coming soon. Take care of your little sister."

"Ursula and I took our seat on the train and I waved and watched my mother

George Levy Mueller details life as a Holocaust survivor

as the train pulled away and she grew smaller and smaller, finally disappearing altogether. I never saw her again. Now, more than sixty years later, not a day goes by that I don't think of this, one of the great sad days of my life.

"Her name was Lucie Hope Levy." (Levy Mueller and Weedman p. 1-2)

This is the beginning of "Lucie's Hope," Levy Mueller's memoirs of the Holocaust, written with Roslyn Z. Weedman and published in 2003 by InfinityPublishing.com.

As a young child, Georg (the birth spelling of his name) Levy's family lived a successful and happy life, surrounded by friends. Then, like a bad dream, friends slowly turned their backs on Georg and his family as a hateful and successful smear campaign was waged against the Jewish people. Suddenly Georg's father was no longer welcome in the local pub. Though young, Georg knew something was wrong.

"You have to survive, and you can't survive if you give up. If people gave up they died."

In 1939, Georg's father and uncle were taken to "an organized harassment that preceded actual policies of extermination." (Levy Mueller and Weedman pg. 9) They died shortly after being released.

Georg's mother knew she had to try to save herself and her children.

After Georg and Ursula were separated from her, they spent several years on the move, always in hiding. In 1943, they were taken from their home at a Catholic convent in Holland, St. Jacobus, to concentration camps called Vught, Westerbork and Bergen-Belsen.

George's book captures the sights and sounds of a young boy who should be starting to think about girls, playing ball with neighbors after school and dreading homework. Instead, he was faced with starvation, disease, lice, filth, torture and death.

"Dying was no big deal," he wrote. "Everybody died." (p. 53) It was enough to turn a 15-year-old boy's hair gray.

In March of 1945, 18,000 people died in four weeks at Bergen-Belsen.

Lucie Hope Levy died in a concentration camp, one month prior to its liberation by the Americans.

Yet, in the midst of all of this horror, George (as his name is now spelled) recalls finding good in people and in his surroundings, a trait his mother was known for.

"You have to survive, and you can't survive if you give up," he said. "If people gave up they died."

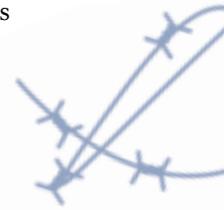

George and Ursula were eventually put on a train – called the Lost Transport – which was liberated by Russian soldiers in 1945. Once George and Ursula's uncle and aunt learned they were alive, they sent for the two children to come and live with them in America.

"I wanted to forget everything and start over," George said. "That's why I changed my name. I didn't want anything to do with the past. Another reason was I didn't want to be known as a Jew anymore, that's why I took my uncle's name, Mueller, so I could assimilate as a regular American, without that hanging over my head. ... Also people didn't want to hear about it for many years ... After the war everyone wanted to forget."

George came to Saint Mary's College around 1950.

"I must say I'm glad I went there because, for the first time since I was 8 years old, I felt like a normal person at Saint Mary's," he said. It was during this time he met his now wife of 48 years,

Katie, whose family lived in Winona at the time.

Their five children grew up not knowing details of their father's history as well. Occasionally phrases like, "You don't know what hunger is" would slip out in conversation with their father.

Yet watching his children grow, George couldn't help but compare his life to theirs. "I do that with my grandkids too. Every time somebody is 8, or whatever age, I would think, 'I was here' or 'I was there.' I think, and

George and Ursula on the steps of St. Jacobus, a Catholic convent in Earsel, Holland, where they lived prior to being taken to the concentration camps.

I wonder how they would do."

It wasn't until after a 50th anniversary trip to Trobitz, commemorating the anniversary of the Lost Transport survivors, that George was able to open up.

"My family insisted that I go on this trip," he said. "I didn't want to go, but they told me I should because it would be good. (After the trip) I felt real good about everything. These very people were at the same place that I was at the same time ... I felt at home, and they were people I could talk to. And it was like kind of like a rock off my chest."

By reading "Lucie's Hope," readers feel as though George is an old friend, one they've known for years. It's a response he gets from many people, he said, "because I laid it all open and wrote it just the way I talk."

George said the book was originally meant only for his family. "It just got out of hand," he said, his humor coming through. "They kept bugging me, and bugging me and bugging me, especially my son ... So I finally did it."

The goal of "Lucie's Hope" is simple: "So that basically they get some understanding of what happened to people," George said. "The futility of it. There's no reason for this to have happened. It's absolutely 100 percent wrong for someone to come in and break up your family and everyone else's family and kill everybody off and take all your property ... There's no reason for it."

George now shares memories of the Holocaust with schools and other organizations. "But I'm no philosopher. I don't philosophize nothing. I just tell what happened. I think it's enough." (p. 86)

But George is more than a "Holocaust survivor;" he's a veteran, husband, father of five, grandfather of 15, pilot, musician and pharmacist, living in Glen Ellyn, Ill.

His children, in their own chapters of "Lucie's Hope," also call him a hero.

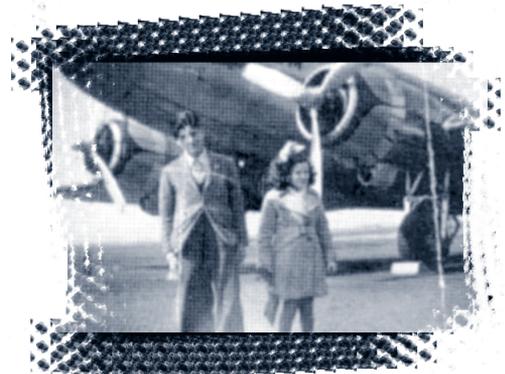

His son, Joe, writes, "I think the best part of his story is that he has kept moving forward, moving on in a positive direction.

"My dad came to this country with nothing. Now he has a profession, a beautiful house, a 45-year marriage to a good woman, five children – all professionals, all successfully married, no divorces – each child with three children of their own. Not bad for an orphan. My dad is an American success story." (qtd. In Levy Mueller and Weedman p. 106 and 109) 📖

This is a recent photograph of Ursula and George, two survivors of the Holocaust.

... for the first time since I was 8 years old, I felt like a normal person ...

Joe Guenther '98 was one of two SMU alums who participated in the Ironman World Championship, Oct. 18, 2003.

IRONMEN HAVE SOFT SPOTS

Two SMU alums participate in Ironman World Championships

Only 3 percent of the competitors are good enough, fast enough, and tough enough to be chosen.

Despite the fierce competition and the seemingly insurmountable odds, two Saint Mary's alums, Matt Guzik '81 and Joe Guenther '98, competed in the 25th Ironman World Championships Oct. 18, 2003, in Kailua-Kona, Hawaii.

Each year, more than 50,000 triathletes world-wide attempt to qualify for the championship event, but the field is limited to only 1,500 athletes.

Despite what the increased media attention of triathlons and adventure races would lead you to believe, only a very small percentage of people in the world have completed a full-length Ironman race – a 2.5 mile swim, a 112-mile bike ride, and a 26.2-mile marathon.

JOE GUENTHER started dreaming of triathlons at the age of 10. He participated in many sports during his childhood in southeastern Minnesota, and he ran track and cross country while attending Saint Mary's. He still holds two track and field records as a member of the distance medley and 1,600 meter relay teams.

While completing his master's degree in Saint Mary's Resource Analysis program, he bought his first bike in Fountain City, Wis., and began riding with a group there. At that time, he was focused on biking and running, but claims he was a terrible swimmer. In fact, he did not really learn swimming technique until he was 25, when he trained with a youth group at the University of Minnesota.

Matt Guzik '81 used the competition to raise money for charities.

His favorite and strongest portion of the triathlon is running, but he looks at swimming and biking as part of the challenge.

Last summer, Guenther completed Ironman Canada in 10 hours 5 minutes in order to qualify for one of the five slots available in the 25- to 29-year-old age group at the World Championships. He then had only seven weeks to both recover from Ironman Canada and prepare for Ironman Hawaii. Plus, he came down with bronchitis during this short period.

Guenther is one of about 100 athletes on the Degree® Ironman Team, sponsored by Degree® Antiperspirant. He also competes with Team Purple Haze, a co-ed adventure racing team. His love for the outdoors and adventure may have begun in Winona; he is rumored to have solo-canoeed the Mississippi River from the headwaters through Minnesota in 11 days.

He says it was helpful to have a competitive running background and thanks current cross country coach, John Skemp, for being flexible with his schedule while he was in school.

Skemp describes Guenther as “interesting and entertaining to talk to.

“He’s a super-motivated and hard-working guy who gets out there and gets after it,” Skemp said.

MATT GUZIK Unlike Guenther, Matt Guzik was not involved in collegiate athletics. He spent most of his college days working toward his business degree, putting in work-study hours in the development office, and serving as a DJ for KSMR.

Guzik, now known as “Marathon Matt” in Montana, began competing in order to raise funds for the Bitterroot Valley Region where he lives. In 2000, Guzik ran 13 marathons in 13 months, raising more than $1,000 per race for 36 area charities.

He knew he was onto something. He petitioned Ironman to allow him to run by “lottery selection” rather than qualifying times so that he could raise funds for The Greater Ravalli Foundation, which assists children in the Bitterroot Valley Region with financial assistance for basic educational needs, essential capital improvements, lunches, clothing, and extracurricular activities. Guzik’s goal was to raise $1,000 per Ironman mile ($140,600) for the Foundation. He put all his energy into training and raising funds, and it paid off.

Donations exceeded his goal, reaching $262,850, plus an additional $5,000 for being the second-highest fundraiser in the Janus Charity Challenge (sponsored by the Janus investment firm). In the past five years, Guzik has raised just less than a half million dollars for charities in rural Montana.

According to the Greater Ravalli Foundation, “Guzik is a fun, generous, magnetic, and highly principled individual who just likes to help. He has changed our community measurably, visibly, and irreversibly for the better.” The Ravalli Republic News coined Guzik “a saint.”

THE ATHLETES

Both athletes live and train out west – Guenther in Boise, Idaho, and Guzik in Hamilton, Mont. They particularly love the outdoorsy-feel of these towns and the training groups they are involved in.

Both men completed the World Championship race well-under the allotted time. The two finished the grueling race within an hour of each other.

Both commented on the difficulty of the swim, especially without the use of wetsuits. In other races, the wetsuit served as protection against other swimmers and provided some buoyancy. The heat was also a factor, especially for the bike and the run portions which took place on black lava paths or black pavement in 80 degree temperatures.

But Guenther and Guzik agree it was all worth the incredible feeling they experienced as they turned down Alii Drive and were greeted by the noise, the music, and the crowds as they crossed the finish line. Finishing pictures of Guzik show him wearing a white cowboy hat, a big grin, and running alongside his 16-year-old son who was there supporting him. Guenther said, “To be a part of the 25th anniversary was wonderful – they gave us extra anniversary gear and treated us just great. Seeing the crowds and my family at the finish was amazing.”

A brief history of the web

(at SMU)

It is difficult for many of us to imagine a world without the World Wide Web. However, the roots of the Web date back little more than 10 years.

In 1990, physicist-turned-programmer Tim Berners-Lee and colleague Robert Cailliau at the European Laboratory for Particle Physics (CERN) in Switzerland began to collaborate on something that eventually opened the floodgates to mass use by turning the Internet into an ocean navigable by anyone able to point and click a mouse.

On Dec. 12, 1991, the first Web server in America was installed on an IBM mainframe computer at the Stanford Linear Accelerator Center (SLAC).

The development of Saint Mary's website might best be viewed by the contributions of each of the "webmasters."

Dr. Wes Miller (1995-1996)

In spring of 1995, Dr. Wes Miller (sociology department) was granted a quarter-time release to bring the first Saint Mary's website into existence with the assistance of then public information director, Bob Conover. (Fig. 1) Dr. Miller and a student assistant loaded the college catalog and fact sheet onto a webserver. Later, admission materials, a campus map, alumni connections, athletic schedules and college newsletters were added.

Brother Richard Lemberg, FSC (1997-1998) and Mike Campbell (1998-1999)

As the first website continued to evolve, plans were outlined to reflect the institution's image, philosophy, quality and some of the atmosphere visitors might experience if visiting the campus. In the fall of 1998, the redesigned website went "live" – offering information on academic programs, activities and athletics, facilities, faculty and staff, admission, alumni and general information. (Fig. 2) Included in the new design was a common graphic theme and a greater use of photos. Visitors to the new website could – for the first time – apply for admission online via an electronic form.

Brother Richard Lemberg, FSC, who oversaw much of the implementation of this new site, became the director of SMU's Fitzgerald Library, and Mike Campbell stepped into the webmaster position. Under Campbell's direction the website continued to grow, adding many useful services such as an alumni e-mail directory and many more forms for applying to everything from sports camps to alumni events.

A. Eric Heukeshoven (1999-present)

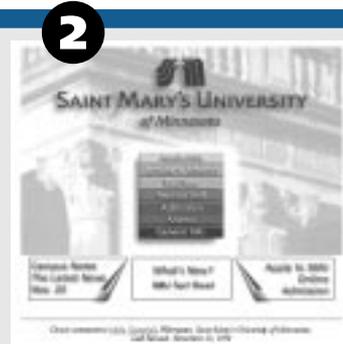

One of my first tasks as webmaster was to figure out a way to represent Saint Mary's exploding growth in the School of Graduate and Special Programs at our Twin Cities campus and Rochester Center. A look at the SMU home page in 2002 (Fig. 3) shows how the site was adapted to include much more of the entire SMU community. But the look and structure were still based on the 1998 foundation.

I can recall discussing a third redesign of the website as early as 2001. Over time and many meetings later, a new site design did emerge accommodating the design wishes of many departments. The current website celebrated its first anniversary in February 2004. (Fig. 4) Today's website offers options that were not possible with its predecessors: the ability to pay online (e-commerce); a much greater use of graphics; and a means for our faculty and staff to easily update information using just their Web browser.

The World Wide Web and Saint Mary's University have changed and expanded dramatically in the last decade. No one knows what exactly is to come, but I for one am excited to be a part of our continuing history. 🌐

Cardinal pride shines at first 'M' Club weekend

When it was first decided that the newly formed Saint Mary's University Cardinal 'M' Club would sponsor a special weekend — one that would include an alumni golf outing and a special program to induct the year's SMU Hall of Fame honorees, among other things — there were all kinds of questions.

And very few answers.

When the dust finally settled following the two-day event in late September, however, the only question left unanswered was ... what do we do for an encore?

"Anytime you do something for the first time, you want to make sure that it's special, and that it's something that you can build on for years to come," said SMU athletic director Chris Kendall '79, who, along with Cardinal 'M' Club director Don Olson and SMU director of alumni relations Meg (Leuer '97) Richtman spearheaded the venture. "We were starting out from scratch, so we really had no idea what to expect."

The event kicked off with a golf outing on Saturday, Sept. 20. More than 90 golfers took part in the 18-hole scramble event, which included a buffet dinner and awards ceremony. From there, it was back to campus, as the Cardinal 'M' Club hosted an awards ceremony that not only included the induction of six new members into the SMU Sports Hall of Fame, but also recognized the outstanding achievements of SMU's current student-athletes.

"It was exciting to formally recognize the outstanding achievements of our student athletes," said Kendall, noting that the Cardinal 'M' Club was created in 2002 to recognize the athletic accomplishments of both past and present Saint Mary's student athletes. The Cardinal 'M' Club's mission is to promote and support SMU's current athletic programs. "Athletics is an integral part of many people's collegiate experience. Their accomplishments on the playing fields, and in the classroom, deserve to be recognized."

Men's hockey players Brad Mattson '89 and Matthew Montgomery '89, along with Lisa (Janikowski '87) Schlosser (women's basketball), Tim Piechowski '88 (baseball, basketball), Amy Cichanowski '92 (nordic skiing, cross country) and Kristen (Kluge '93) Steensland (women's soccer) made up the SMU Sports Hall of Fame Class of 2003, while senior Al Schumacher '04 (men's hockey) and junior Ashley Dingels '05 (volleyball, track and field) were named SMU's Outstanding Male and Female Athletes from 2002-03.

"We've said it from the beginning — one of the missions of the Cardinal 'M' Club is to help link the past with the present — and we did that with this type of weekend celebration," said Olson, adding that, along with the Saturday festivities, there were also five different alumni games that took place the following day. "The golf outing was a huge success — we had great weather, a lot of fun on the course, and a nice dinner/awards ceremony afterwards.

"It was just a wonderful weekend."

Richtman agreed. "There's no question the event was a huge success," she said, adding that plans for next year's event — to be held Sept. 11 and 12 — are already underway. "This (Cardinal 'M' Club weekend) gives the alumni association an opportunity to recognize our annual Sports Hall of Fame inductees in front of our student-athletes, faculty and staff, as well as the many other former SMU athletes who attended the festivities.

"Having the ceremony and the many other Cardinal 'M' Club events on a weekend when the campus is alive with many sporting events, alumni games and student activities, gives our alumni a real sense of Cardinal pride." 📷

Sports Hall of Fame Inductees

Amy Cichanowski '92 • Cichanowski was the best nordic skier ever to compete at Saint Mary's, earning all-conference and all-region honors in both the freestyle and classic races during her senior season. A team captain, Cardinal Award-winner and an Academic All-Region and All-American, Cichanowski won the school's first-ever regional freestyle individual championship and competed in the national meet during the 1991-1992 season.

Brad Mattson '89 • Mattson lettered all three hockey seasons he was at Saint Mary's, earning All-Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference honors in both his junior and senior seasons. A second-team All-American in 1988, Mattson earned first-team All-American honors in his final season, while also being named Co-MIAC Player of the Year with teammate Matthew Montgomery — the first and only time in the history of the award that teammates have shared player of the year honors. A forward and team captain his senior year, Mattson helped guide Saint Mary's to an MIAC regular-season title in 1987-88 and an MIAC playoff title — and an NCAA Division III national tournament berth — in 1988-89. Mattson holds the top two single-season scoring records, boasting 79 points during his senior season, seven more than his point total the year earlier. His 49 and 45 assists during the 1988-89 and 1987-88 seasons are also the two best performances in Cardinal history. Despite playing only three seasons, Mattson's 184 career points rank him fourth all-time — just three points behind No. 2 Nate DeMars. His 105 career assists are third all-time, while his 79 career goals rank him No. 6. Mattson was the MIAC's scoring champion in both his junior and senior seasons, and was a two-time MIAC Academic All-Conference selection.

Matthew Montgomery '89 • A four-year letterwinner in hockey, Montgomery earned All-Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference honors in both his junior and senior seasons. A second-team All-American in 1988, Montgomery earned first-team All-American honors in his final season, while also being named Co-MIAC Player of the Year with teammate Brad Mattson — the first and only time in the history of the award that teammates have shared player of the year honors. Tabbed the best defenseman in the MIAC, Montgomery helped guide Saint Mary's to an MIAC regular-season title in 1987-88 and an MIAC playoff title — and an NCAA Division III national tournament berth — in 1988-89. In his senior season, Montgomery scored 20 goals, which ranks him No. 1 all-time for defensemen at SMU.

Tim Piechowski '88 • A three-year letterwinner in baseball and a two-year letterwinner in basketball, Piechowski earned all-conference baseball honors in each of his three seasons at Saint Mary's. A Max Molock Award winner, Piechowski was named the MIAC's MVP his senior season and was selected by the Montreal Expos in the 17th round of the major league baseball draft. He spent three years in the minor leagues before pursuing other opportunities.

Lisa (Janikowski '87) Schlosser • A four-year letterwinner in basketball, Janikowski ranks first in school history in assists in a game (14), season (126) and career (215). The two-year captain and two-time All-Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference selection — and a member of Saint Mary's 1985-86 conference champions and NCAA Division III national tournament participants — also ranks fifth in career field goals made (419), sixth in steals in a season (66, 1985-86) and seventh in career scoring (904 points). Janikowski was also a four-year letterwinner in cross country.

Kristen (Kluge '93) Steensland • A four-year letterwinner in soccer, Kluge was twice an All-Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference performer, earning MIAC Player of the Year honors in 1991, while garnering team MVP honors in 1992. Kluge helped guide the Cardinals to three straight conference championships and three consecutive NCAA Division III National Tournament appearances from 1989-1991. A second-team All-West Region pick as a freshman in 1989, Kluge earned first-team All-West Region honors in both her junior and senior years, and was also a first-team All-American in both of those seasons. Her 30 career goals and 101 career points rank her fifth all-time, while her 25 career assists are No. 6 all-time.

Just one of the guys

SMU goalie Justin Simmons doesn't let deafness keep him off the ice

Saint Mary's University freshman goalie Justin Simmons has been deaf since the age of 18 months, when spinal meningitis cost him his hearing. The obstacle, however, hasn't kept him from making a name for himself at the collegiate — and world — level.

They line up across the goal line for the player introductions.

"Starting in goal for the Cardinals, a freshman from Wolfeboro, New Hampshire, number 31, Justin Simmons ..."

Fellow goalie Ryne Ess taps Simmons on the pads, prompting Simmons to skate out to the blue line, amidst a thunderous ovation from the Saint Mary's University faithful.

It's an experience every college hockey player cherishes — to hear those cheers, to feel that rush of adrenaline as hordes of people stand and cheer as your name is announced.

The feeling is indescribable.

It's also impossible for Simmons.

He's deaf.

"It's not as complicated as people might think," said Simmons, who has been deaf since the age of 18 months, when spinal meningitis cost him his hearing. "What most people have a hard time understanding is that, other than the fact that I can't hear, I'm just like everyone else."

On the ice, however, he's no ordinary Joe — not by a long shot.

Simmons grew up playing youth hockey in his hometown of Wolfeboro, N.H., switching between goalie and forward until the age of 12, when he decided it was time to stick to one or the other. Thanks to some fancy new equipment purchased by his father, Simmons chose goalie.

"My dad has had a big influence on my hockey career," said Simmons, noting that his father was his coach — and interpreter — all the way up to high school. "He was always there for me, every day in practice, signing for me so that I could understand what was going on."

An all-state selection and the team's MVP as a senior at Kingswood High School, Simmons also played junior hockey for the Exeter Junior Seawolves and the Boston Junior Bulldogs.

Unlike many of his current SMU teammates, however, Simmons didn't make the step from junior hockey to the collegiate level — he made one more stop in between.

The Olympics.

Simmons was one of three goalies on the U.S. Deaf National Olympic Team roster, and helped the team win a bronze medal during the 2003 Games in Sweden.

"Justin is a special kid," said Jeff Sauer, former coach of the NCAA Division I Wisconsin Badgers and the current U.S. Deaf National coach. "We're excited about the opportunity to have Justin back for the 2007 Olympics in Salt Lake City. He's proven to be not only an outstanding goalie, but also an outstanding individual."

"I was playing for the New Hampshire Select team (as a 15-year-old). One of the University of New Hampshire assistant coaches saw me play, made a call to the people at the American Hearing Impaired Hockey Association (AHIHA) and told them they wanted me for the next Olympic team," explained Simmons, who spent four straight summers training at the USA Hockey training facilities in Colorado Springs, Colo., in preparation for the Olympic Games. "It was an awesome experience."

Playing for the U.S. national team, however, was slightly different than what Simmons would encounter when he arrived on the Saint Mary's University campus. After all, while playing for the U.S. team, Simmons was playing on an equal playing field — all the competitors were hearing impaired.

At Saint Mary's, he's the only one.

To which Simmons just shrugged his shoulders and said, "Big deal."

"I have been deaf my whole life — it's something I have had to deal with since I was very, very young, so it's really not that big of a deal," said Simmons, who has no trouble speaking clearly and reads lips to converse with teammates, friends and instructors. It is probably a bigger adjustment for everyone else — they've never played with a deaf goalie before.

"Justin is a great kid — he works hard every day and always has such a positive attitude," said SMU coach Don Olson. "I think Justin has been a great asset to our team this season — both on the ice and off. On the ice, he has made a solid contribution as a freshman goaltender (tying high-powered Lake Forest 5-5 in his collegiate opener, then picking up his first win with a 6-5 win over UW-Stout). Off the ice, he has fit in nicely with the rest of the team — he's just one of the guys."

"People need to realize that I am no different — I just can't hear," said Simmons. "My teammates here have been great, they are always asking me questions about things — like how do I wake up in the morning if I can't hear the alarm clock? Or how do I take notes in class if I have to watch the instructor (or the interpreter) to read their lips?"

Just how does Simmons get up in the morning? He has a device that goes from his alarm clock to his bed. When the alarm goes off, it vibrates the bed. As for in the classroom, Simmons' classmates help out by allowing him to borrow their class notes.

"I can't take my own notes, because I can't look down to write," said Simmons, explaining that in order for him to read lips, or understand the interpreter's signing, he needs to see them, and looking down to write defeats that purpose.

"Being able to see people's faces is very important for me. People don't need to speak any different than they normally do. They don't need to talk slower — or louder. They just need to be themselves."

Which is exactly what Simmons does — be himself.

And his teammates and friends are quickly learning that there's another side to Simmons, a rather comedic side.

"I was talking to Justin the other day and I couldn't quite understand what he was saying, so I kept saying, 'What? What?'" explained fellow goalie Curtis Nosal. "And Justin finally looks at me and says, 'What's your problem, are you deaf?'"

"I am very comfortable with (being deaf)," explained Simmons, who joked at a team Christmas party, after getting a DVD as a present — "This is no good to me, it doesn't have captions!"

"It's one of those things, you can either sit back and feel sorry for yourself, or you can get on with your life and not let it affect you."

Simmons chose the latter.

"Every one of the kids who attend our (training camp) is a special individual — Justin included," said Sauer, who expects Simmons to be one of his top two goalies at the 2007 Olympics. "Being deaf, or hearing impaired, does not have to be a handicap. They may not be able to hear like other people, but they can also do things that another person, with all of their senses, cannot."

Olson agreed.

"Justin's not about to use his deafness as an excuse or a crutch," Olson said. "The world is filled with individuals who have overcome disabilities to achieve great things — I think having Justin as a teammate has helped the rest of the team understand and appreciate that that much more."

"Never underestimate anybody," Simmons philosophized. "I've always believed that if you work as hard as you can, you can accomplish anything."

"People need to realize that I am no different — I just can't hear."

Saint Mary's Alumni Association keeps our alumni connected

I am honored to be serving as president of the Saint Mary's University Alumni Board of Directors this year. I have many fond memories of my experiences while a student at Saint Mary's, of the faculty and staff, and of course, my fellow students. The education and life skills I received from Saint Mary's, as I'm sure many of you can agree, have enabled me to aspire to higher achievements and have guided me through difficult times, as well.

The goal of the alumni association is to advance the mission of Saint Mary's University of Minnesota by establishing ongoing and mutually beneficial relationships between the university and its alumni. Each year the alumni board works very hard to fulfill this mission. This year is no exception. I am fortunate to have a wonderful group of alums – spanning graduation years from 1954 to 1998 – working with me. I am thankful for their continued enthusiasm and commitment to Saint Mary's and the alumni association.

One of the new tasks the board has committed to is to construct a veterans memorial on campus to honor all current students and alumni who serve – and who have served – in the armed forces. The board created a subcommittee that is currently soliciting ideas from artists for the design of the memorial. We will continue to keep you updated on our progress with this monument.

With input from the board of directors' Admissions/Communications Committee, the new SMU website rolled out in February 2003. Through the website, there are many easy ways to connect with the university, see what is happening on campus, find information, register for upcoming alumni events, make a gift to your alma mater, and access e-mail addresses of fellow alums to rekindle friendships. You can also communicate with the alumni office and sign up for our many alumni volunteer opportunities. Check it out today at www.smumn.edu/alumni.

Our Awards Committee joined forces with the new Cardinal 'M' Club and assisted them in nominating and inducting six alumni into the Sports Hall of Fame at the inaugural awards program, held on Sept. 20, 2003. Approximately 350 people were in attendance for the ceremony, which also honored current student-athletes for their many academic and athletic accomplishments.

Our Events Committee continues to look for ways to enhance Homecoming weekend. One of our improvements for Homecoming 2004 will be joining the annual alumni awards ceremony with the Homecoming dinner. This change will give our alumni more time in the evening for other social opportunities and to plan special class gatherings. In addition, the committee continues to work with the alumni office to execute the next Saint Mary's Convention, which will be held in the Twin Cities on Nov. 12-13. The convention will take the university (faculty, staff and students) out to our alumni, parents and prospective students, and will highlight cutting-edge programs, inform others about new educational opportunities, and include many events for socializing and networking.

Our University Relations Committee continues to enhance our annual "Life after Saint Mary's" event. This event brings a variety of alumni on campus to meet with our current students about career options, networking skills, interviewing advice, and résumé-writing expertise. The event took place on Friday, March 5. If you are interested in coming back to campus to talk with students about your career and life after Saint Mary's, please contact the alumni office at (800) 635-5987, Ext. 1499.

The Twin Cities and Chicago Alumni Chapters continue to plan and host events allowing opportunities for alumni to reconnect with one another. In the Twin Cities, some of the recent events have included: Community Outreach Day, Basilica Block Party alumni tent, St. Paul Saints baseball game, a Guthrie Theater event, Minnesota Wild vs. Chicago Blackhawks NHL outing, and our annual SMU vs. St. Thomas hockey game and reception. In Chicago, they had another successful golf outing this past summer, an annual Chicago Cubs outing and events for young alumni. In addition to Twin Cities and Chicago, alumni gatherings are being planned this year in Winona, Missouri, Florida, Colorado and Washington, D.C. If you are interested in any of these events or would like to volunteer, contact the alumni office at alumni@smumn.edu.

There are a number of opportunities to stay connected with the university, whether it is by attending an event, connecting with current students, or offering your time and talents. I encourage you to become involved with SMU. If you have any comments, feedback, or ideas, we would love to hear from you today!

Bar association presidents mix business with pleasure

John Dornik '86 was the one Saint Mary's students went to when they were in trouble — big trouble.

If his dorm mates were in danger of being suspended, they called on Dornik to represent them during disciplinary hearings. It was only natural he decided to change majors from medicine to law.

Dornik admits he was always drawn to social justice issues and enjoyed advocating on behalf of other students, so after graduating from Saint Mary's College, he attended the University of Minnesota Law School.

John Dornik '86

A practicing lawyer since 1989, he has been a Minneapolis personal injury attorney with Mackenzie & Hallberg since 1996.

Dornik was named head of the Hennepin County Bar Association (HBCA) in Minnesota in July 2003 — during a time of such economic hardship, many lawyers are simply trying to stay afloat. But Dornik is sure he can weather the storm of budget and funding cuts.

His plan is to not only recruit new members to the bar association but more importantly showcase the value of being a member — including what he calls “a great opportunity to make a difference.” HBCA committees, he said, are influential in shaping the direction of court polity and community outreach.

A strong proponent of volunteering, Dornik is active outside the courtroom as well. He volunteers with coaching youth football, basketball and baseball and serves on the school board at his children's school. He said he used to volunteer because he thought he should; now he volunteers because he's hooked.

Robert Truhlar '79

Robert Truhlar '79 started out studying biology at Saint Mary's. After deciding it was “too messy,” he decided to major in education instead. The idea to become a lawyer, he said, came later in life — after all, he'd often been told he could argue both sides of any issue.

He and his wife, Doris, practice law together at Truhlar and Truhlar L.L.P., in Littleton, Colo.

Specializing in employment law, employment discrimination law and litigation, Truhlar has been in private practice for 22 years. He became president of the Colorado Bar Association July 1.

During nine regional presidential visits throughout Colorado, Truhlar conducted Bench-Bar Trivia Bowls and strummed his guitar while panels of lawyers were deliberating on questions.

His goal is “to make every lawyer I come in contact with feel good about themselves and the fact they're a lawyer ... I really like lawyers and think we perform an incredible service to society.

“As lawyers, you now have a great opportunity to make a difference. There are so many different ways in which you can use your law degree and license for the benefit of yourself and society.”

Beyond his volunteer involvement in the legal community, Truhlar, too, believes in benefiting society through volunteering as well. He has coached high school mock trial competitions, taught the public how to represent themselves in court, volunteered at church, and coached and refereed youth soccer. He and his wife also answered late night phone calls at a local radio station during a call-a-lawyer radio show.

Alumni share their SMU memories

Last spring The Winona Daily News asked us to gather advice and perspectives from our alumni, to be used in a preview story before our May 10 graduation. The response was overwhelming — as well as heartfelt and entertaining. Here is just one of many. Click on www.smumn.edu/alumni to read more memories from SMU alums.

NAME (FIRST, MAIDEN, LAST) Wally Weisenburger

CLASS YEAR, AGE 1979, 45

FAMILY My immediate family: wife of 19 years, 2 children: 15 and 13. I had 2 brothers who attended SMU, class of 1975 and 1982.

OCCUPATION Senior Vice President, Northern Trust Company

DEGREE(S) BA – SMU, MBA – DePaul University
ADDITIONAL EDUCATION Graduate Banking Degree (BAI) – School of Banking, University of Wisconsin, Madison

CAREER HIGHLIGHTS I have been fortunate to work for the same company for my entire career. It is a great company that has afforded me the luxury of tremendous variety while working for the same firm. They have given me the opportunity to progress and participate in the progress of the firm. They have also allowed me to balance my career with my family and outside interests.

FAVORITE SMU MEMORIES I have a number of favorite memories. Almost of all of them center around the people I met during my 4 years. I have traveled around the country and have done a number of campus recruiting trips for my firm and I have never been in a place like Saint Mary's. Still today, I travel back each and every year with my 4 college roommates to 'relive' our experiences. We spend a weekend telling 'old' stories and sharing the common bond which brought us together. We have done this every year since graduation. In fact, we made a pact during our senior year, to get together every year which includes dinner at Ed Sullivans. Of the 24 years since graduation, three of us have made it every single year.

Each year they add another section onto what they have now termed the "Ode."

"Four of us and sometimes five
 From Chicago to Winona, we take a drive
 It is time for our annual blast
 A time to reminisce about the past

"Friendships and the games make the weekend a sure bet.
 But it is the memories of SMU that we will never forget.
 Friends, Wally, Fabio, Duck, Don and Ken
 Will make the trip to Saint Mary's again."

NOW VS. THEN Take your time looking for a job out of school. It is important to find a company that values their employees. Look for companies that value philanthropy as well as one with good benefits. Most young people do not value a company's benefit plan but if you have any intention of staying with a firm, then find one that has great benefits because this will be very important to you as you get older. Remember, starting salary is not the only measure of a good firm.

ONE THING ... Continue your education. It is not easy to get this going again. You lose your study skills and you will acquire more distractions with family and work responsibilities as you get older.
 Also, contribute as much as you can to your company 401k or IRA. The time value of money is so critical that if you start early you will be able to retire comfortably.

ADDITIONAL ADVICE Work hard at maintaining your SMU friends. You have a common bond that can never be broken.

Schneider hopes for gift of life

Though retired, Jack Schneider '55 is an active 70-year-old. With a wife of nearly 50 years, four grown children and seven grandchildren, his life in Lincolnwood, Ill., can't slow down – despite kidney failure.

Schneider's kidneys shut down in October 2002. His wife, Theresa, remembers how close she came to losing her husband that fall. Through dialysis – and certainly love and prayers of his family and friends – Schneider has been able to cope with his medical condition.

But, Schneider is hoping to regain the strength and energy he had a year and a half ago by undergoing a kidney transplant. Though he admits he is not afraid of death, he hopes to watch his grandchildren grow up. And he wants to live the remainder of his life unencumbered by dialysis machines, which filter his blood. He currently must dialyze four hours a day, three times a week.

It is his greatest hope that a donor will come forward with this gift of life. Schneider's blood type is AB, which means that he can accept a kidney from any healthy person, no matter their blood type.

Schneider is retired from marketing and sales at Dudek & Bock Spring Manufacturing Co. His first love was skipping his charter boat on fishing trips across Lake Michigan. He recently sold his charter business due to his current health situation.

Any classmates or friends of the university who could help Schneider are asked to call the Alumni Office at (800) 635-5987, Ext. 1499.

Plant an endowment at Saint Mary's

Spring is here, and we are paying special attention to the array of flowers blooming brightly in our endowment patch. These perennial plants remind us of the faithful benefactors who provided the resources to establish these endowments. They also cheer us as we see the difference they make in our long-term financial landscape.

Endowments provide encouragement and resources for meeting today's needs and tomorrow's challenges. The funds provide ongoing support for operations, building needs and special projects, such as scholarship and enrichment programs.

Lawrence Johnson, Gift Planning Director

Like any garden, it's nice to have annuals like marigolds and geraniums, but it's even more wonderful to have perennials like daffodils and tulips — the "endowment plants."

Would you like to plant an endowment at Saint Mary's that will bloom year after year? Would you like to have a special place in our garden where your "flower" will provide beauty and encouragement for generations?

You can plant an endowment now with a current gift, or arrange for an endowment through your will. Some of our endowment benefactors establish an endowment now and add to it later through their estate plans.

To learn more about creating an endowment fund at Saint Mary's University of Minnesota, please contact Lawrence Johnson, director of gift planning toll free at (800) 635-5987, Ext. 1785, or by e-mail at LPJohnso@smumn.edu.

Former Bishop George Speltz leaves behind lengthy legacy

Former Bishop George Speltz '32, who drew international attention in the mid-1980s when he initiated a ban to deny church weddings to couples who live together before they marry, died Feb. 1, 2004. He was 91.

Considered both a liberal (for his stance on rural issues) and a conservative (in regard to issues of doctrine), Speltz served as bishop during turbulent years, both in the United States and in the Church.

Speltz — who served approximately 20 years as the Bishop of St. Cloud — issued a pastoral letter in 1984 directing priests in his diocese not to marry couples who lived together unless they agreed to live apart before their wedding. He called cohabitation before marriage "immoral and a scandal to the community."

In his letter, Speltz said he sought to clarify the church's teachings on courtship and marriage. He said cohabitation "calls into question fundamental moral values that have long been central to the Christian tradition: the sacred character of sex and of the Christian family."

The bishop said he hoped the policy would reduce the likelihood of marriages ending in divorce.

Speltz attended three sessions of the Second Vatican Council in the early 1960s. He was instrumental in activating the Minnesota Catholic Conference and was a nationally recognized expert on rural life.

According to the St. Cloud Times, five bishops, including Speltz, spent a half-decade writing a pastoral letter on American economic policies. Many say Speltz was responsible for convincing bishops to include a section on agricultural issues that stresses the importance of the family farm and urges those in rural areas to join together — thus insuring the Catholic Church would pay attention to rural America.

He was president of the national Rural Life Conference from 1970-1972, celebrated Rural Life Day of Prayer Masses on family farms in the 1980s and wrote the book "Agriculture With a Human Face" in 1995.

Speltz was born on a farm in Altura, Minn., and graduated from Holy Trinity High School, Rollingstone, Minn., and Saint Mary's College. He attended the St. Paul Seminary and was ordained in Winona in 1940. He then earned a Ph.D. from the Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., in 1944.

From 1944 to 1947, he served as vice chancellor of the Diocese of Winona and was the diocese's superintendent of schools from 1945 to 1949. In 1946, he was appointed chaplain and professor at Saint Mary's College and assisted in organizing Immaculate Heart of Mary Seminary; he was appointed the seminary's first rector in 1948 and served until 1963.

On March 25, 1963, he was installed as auxiliary bishop for Winona diocese. One month later he was named pastor of St. Mary's Church, Winona, a position he held until his installation as coadjutor bishop of the Diocese of St. Cloud in 1966.

He served as bishop of the Diocese of St. Cloud from 1968 to 1987, when he retired at the age of 74 due to health concerns.

looking back

Photos from the archives show the way it used to be.

Saint Mary's hockey began in 1928 on an outdoor rink. In the early '80s, construction plans included a new hockey rink facility. A "temporary" hockey arena (shown above), often referred to as "the bubble," was raised for the '81-'82 season. The bubble continued to be used until 1987, when the current hockey facility was completed. Saint Mary's maintenance staff have many stories about trying to keep the bubble from caving in from snow weight, climbing the precarious ladders to clear the top (see left) and mending 20-foot tears. If you have any stories about the bubble, we would love to hear them.

Anyone with more — or more accurate — information about these photos is welcome to contact Saint Mary's Magazine editor, Deb Nahrgang. Mail comments to: Saint Mary's Magazine, Saint Mary's University, 700 Terrace Heights #36, Winona, MN 55987. Or, send e-mail to: dnahrgan@smumn.edu.

looking ahead

At the end of November 2003, the university began construction on a new lobby for the ice arena. Earlier last year, Don '51 and Jean (CST '55) Regan of Saint Paul, Minn., approached the university with a gift restricted to the lobby that would underwrite the $300,000 construction cost.
