Saint Mary's response to the terrorist attacks helps campus community cope with tragic events

Donny Nadeau '85
Saint Mary's
Magazine Editor

As I watched in disbelief as the horror of Sept. 11 unfolded in Washington and New York City, a little voice inside my head kept repeating over and over, “this can’t be happening, this can’t be happening.”

Unfortunately, this was one nightmare that neither I, nor anyone else, will ever be able to forget — the world as we knew it had been changed forever.

It was one of those “I remember exactly where I was when” moments that will be etched into our memories, in much the same way as the day John F. Kennedy was assassinated, or when the space shuttle Challenger exploded.

Time has helped heal some of the emotional wounds, but the healing process has been a difficult one.

The alumni magazine editorial staff realizes that it’s time to try and move on, to try and get our lives back to some sense of normalcy. But at the same time, we feel it’s important to inform all our readers on how the Saint Mary’s University community reacted to these tragic events, and what the future may hold.

The night of the attacks, Saint Mary’s held a prayer service, and then an open forum to discuss the day’s tragic events. A faculty panel examined the implications of the attacks, and fielded questions from the audience of students, faculty/staff and the public.

As the initial shock of the attacks wore off, and grim reality set in, the university scheduled an all-campus convocation, at which time a panel of staff, faculty and students shared their thoughts, and members of the audience related their own experiences. “It’s OK to be angry, but don’t confuse that with hate,” said Dr. Dennis Gravert, a faculty panelist from the chemistry department. “It’s OK to seek justice, but don’t confuse that with vengeance.”

Security around campus was beefed up, faculty and staff were alerted to the warning signs and proper protocol for handling suspicious letters and packages, and webmaster Eric Huekeshoven used his talents to keep everyone informed via the SMU website (see page 13).

But that’s not all.

As the war on terrorism continues, President Bush has ordered the largest call-up of Reserve and National Guard members since the Persian Gulf War, with an estimated one-fourth of the individuals called to active duty being college and university students. Saint Mary’s has adopted two policies relating to military leaves of absence, which will allow students to complete their required course work upon their return.

What does the future hold? No one knows for sure, but because of the events of Sept. 11, change in the way we live our lives is inevitable.

“The events of Sept. 11 will affect the core of the learning process,” explained Brother President Louis DeThomasis, FSC, during a question-and-answer session for this issue (page 10). “The fundamental ways in which we teach, learn and construct our curriculum will have to be transformed to respond to the new landscape that will emerge from these days of horror — it cannot be any other way.

“I cannot tell you today how these changes in higher education will occur or what they will look like, but I can assure you that they will be appropriate and consistent with our mission. ... Our beliefs and how we live them out can make a great impact in the battle against violence and terror.”

On a lighter note, you will notice that this magazine sports a few changes. The name has been changed from University Magazine to Saint Mary’s Magazine, a rather obvious move that more clearly identifies this publication as being about Saint Mary’s University, past and present. And the graphic look has been redesigned to be modern, more readable and more attractive. As always, your feedback is welcome. 📖

Thanks for the tribute to General Hennessey

Thank you so much for including the nice article about my father, Gen. John J. Hennessey '42, set off in its own box in your last issue. My family and I really appreciate it. As I have told you before, we all feel a special fondness for SMU and Winona, as did my father.

I enjoyed seeing your magazine. It's very impressive and well-done. You and your staff should be proud of your work.

Again, thank you for the respectful and dignified farewell to my dad. I wish you continued success with your magazine and SMU.

Peace Corps articles were well-done

I am writing to thank you and let you know that I appreciated the Peace Corps article and photos in the Summer 2001 University Magazine. I am currently the regional Peace Corps recruitment manager. Our office is located in Minneapolis, and we recruit for volunteers in a five-state region. The majority of our recruitment is done at colleges, so it was great to be featured in your magazine. The articles supporting the 40th anniversary of Peace Corps were well-done.

I am a Saint Mary's alum, having graduated in 1965, and served as a Peace Corps volunteer in Colombia, South America (1967-69). I still remember talking to and getting information from a Peace Corps recruiter in the old Saint Mary's student union.

We are still getting great volunteers from Saint Mary's. There are currently two former students serving overseas (Heidi Reetz '01 in China and Richard Hinz '97 in Kazakstan), and one who is about to leave. Again, thank you for the very nice article, and good luck with this coming school year.

Kowles writes text for genetics students

Dr. Richard Kowles, biology department, has written a textbook for students in college genetics courses.

“Solving Problems in Genetics” (Springer-Verlag, New York) will help students solve complex genetics problems in a straightforward, step-by-step manner. The 480-page book is designed to be complementary to regular college genetics texts. The solutions to 432 problems are detailed.

This is Dr. Kowles’ second book. The first, “Genetics, Society and Decisions,” was aimed at non-biology majors in genetics-related general education classes. He’s now working on a third book, which will explain genetics to the public and make complex concepts simple and relevant.

Exhibit debunks common notions of ‘race’

The world-renowned exhibit, “All of Us are Related, Each of Us is Unique,” originally from Paris, is now on display in the McEnery Center lobby. The exhibit uses current genome research to show that the concept of race is no longer scientifically valid. It reveals how closely all of humanity is related, yet also deals with ethnic and cultural diversity, and the negative effects of racism.

The English-language translator of the exhibit, Dr. Marshall Segall, professor emeritus of social and political psychology at Syracuse University, was on campus Oct. 24-26. He met with classes and made two presentations during his visit.

The first talk was part of the International Series on France, “What the French and the Francophone Swiss Can Teach Americans About Race.” Dr. Segall also made a public presentation regarding the exhibit, titled “Why Do We Still Have Racism, if There is No Such Thing as Race?”

2001-02 fact sheet is on the Web

The 2001-02 Fact Sheet for Saint Mary’s University is now available on the SMU Website. The Fact Sheet is the annual effort by the public information office to gather and publish official facts and figures about SMU. It’s chock-full of information about enrollment, programs, contacts and addresses, costs, facilities, student activities, financial aid, etc.

To view this publication, go to www.smumn.edu/general/facts.html. The Fact Sheet is updated throughout the year, with revision dates on the first and third pages.

Cubs’ McDonough advises students on how to succeed after college

John McDonough ’75, vice president for marketing and broadcasting for baseball’s Chicago Cubs, spoke to SMU students Dec. 2. McDonough’s talk, “Road Map to Success: How to pursue your dreams after college” was followed by an open forum. He spent the following day speaking to classes and holding one-on-one sessions with students.

McDonough has been with the Chicago Cubs for 18 years. He has served as their vice president for marketing and broadcasting since 1991. McDonough has an impressive record of accomplishments with the Cubs, including: The Cubs Convention, a prototype for professional team and league fan festivals; the Chicago Cubs Walk of Fame; the first Beanie Baby promotion in professional sports; and the celebrity 7th inning concept commemorating legendary Cubs broadcaster Harry Caray.

Weiner is part of national tribute to Enrico Fermi

Dr. Paul Weiner, mathematics/statistics department, participated in a tribute to Nobel Prize-winning nuclear physicist Enrico Fermi on Sept. 29 at the University of Chicago. Dr. Weiner is Fermi's grandson. Fermi is famed for his ground-breaking work in nuclear fission, quantum physics and development of the atomic bomb during World War II. He died in 1954.

U of C and the U.S. Postal Service unveiled a commemorative postage stamp on the 100th anniversary of Fermi's birthday. Dr. Weiner participated in the unveiling and "first day of issue" ceremony, which coincided with "Enrico Fermi Day" in Chicago.

New undergrad advertising sample is on the Web

An example of the new advertising being used by the Winona undergraduate admission office is on the admission Web page at www.smumn.edu/admission/. The ad, created by the public information office, was designed to echo the new admission recruiting materials' look and theme of "Picture Yourself at Saint Mary's."

Biesanz Stone restores historic statue of Mary

Thanks to the generosity of Biesanz Stone Co., the damaged statue of the Virgin Mary ("Our Lady of the Lilies") in front of Saint Mary's Hall has been restored, cleaned and sealed. The religious icon was severely vandalized on Oct. 19. On Dec. 4, a crew from Inman Construction placed the statue back on its pedestal. The statue has graced the Monsignor Haun Memorial Garden outside the main academic building at Saint Mary's University since it was donated by the senior classes of 1930, 1931 and 1933. Charles W. Biesanz Jr., president of the Winona stone quarrying company, is a 1965 graduate of SMU.

FBI chaplain has spiritual workout with athletes

Father Paul Wierichs, CP '74, led a retreat for 61 male athletes and coaches on Nov. 9 and 10. Father Wierichs is retreat director at the Bishop Molloy Retreat House in Queens, New York.

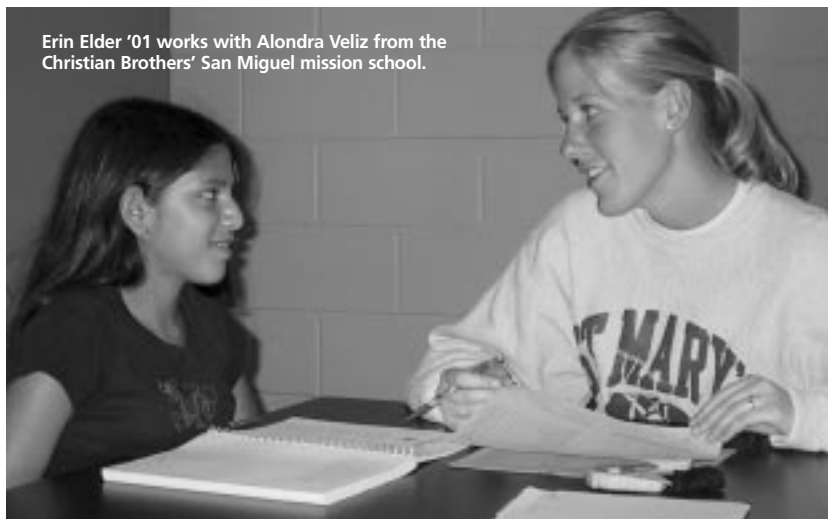

He challenged junior Jason Thilges (pictured left) to do 100 pushups, asking athletes to strengthen their souls as well as their bodies to prepare for the adversities of life. Father Wierichs is also chaplain to the FBI in New York City. He spoke to students at both the Twin Cities and Winona campuses on his experiences at "ground zero" and counseling FBI agents following the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Young visitors work and play at SMU

In October, 25 students from the Christian Brothers' San Miguel mission school in Chicago were guests of the university. The inner-city, 6th grade students of teacher Angela Witt '99 were on campus for a mixture of work and play. Aside from tours and picnics and other fun activities, the children also had their reading skills tested by students in the Master of Arts in Instruction program. Dr. Jane Flynn of the SMU School of Education coordinated the visit.

N.E.H. grant funds national seminar on Russian literature

The National Endowment for the Humanities has awarded Saint Mary's a $70,000 grant to conduct a summer seminar for school teachers from June 24 to July 26, 2002.

Dr. Greg Gaut '69, chair of the SMU history department, wrote the proposal and will lead the seminar, titled "Dostoevsky, Tolstoy, Solovyov: Literature and Religion in Pre-Revolutionary Russia."

Several visiting scholars will contribute to the summer session. Dr. Gary Jahn of the University of Minnesota will lead the seminar for several days during the discussions of Tolstoy, and Dr. Gary Rosenshield of the University of Wisconsin will do the same for discussions of Dostoevsky. Dr. Carolyn Ayers, a Russian literature specialist who teaches world literature in the SMU English department, will also work with seminar participants.

Full-time teachers in all American K-12 schools are eligible to apply, and the 15 teachers who are chosen will receive a stipend to cover travel, books and living expenses. Application deadline is March 1, 2002.

For more information about the seminar and the application process, contact Dr. Gaut at 507-457-6944 or gautneh@smumn.edu, or go to the seminar's webpage at www.smumn.edu/neh.

Saint Mary's reports 2001-02 enrollment

SMU's official figures for the 2001-02 academic year show total enrollment in all SMU degree programs is 5,399 students.

Undergraduate enrollment at the Winona campus is 1,368. There are

1,302 full-time undergraduates and 66 part-time undergraduates. Those numbers include 25 in the De La Salle Language Institute and 23 enrolled in the Post-Secondary Enrollment Options program. New entering freshmen number 397; with transfers, special students and readmitted students added, the total of new students is 465.

The School of Graduate and Special Programs has 3,848 adult students in bachelor completion, master's and doctoral programs at the Twin Cities and Winona campuses, Rochester Center and instructional sites in Minnesota and Wisconsin.

The two institutes affiliated with SMU in Nairobi, Kenya enroll another 183 students.

Dr. Rodeheffer talks about Chinese calligraphy created by Lasallian Honors Program students and faculty.

Honors work on display

Dr. Jane Kelley Rodeheffer, director of the Lasallian Honors Program, hosted honors program faculty and administrators from around the country, September 26-29. The exchange was sponsored by the Lilly Fellows Program in Humanities and the Arts. The four-day session was a chance for SMU faculty to explain the SMU honors program, an alternative, interdisciplinary curriculum based on the great books of the western and eastern traditions.

Continuing a family tradition

Saint Mary's, theatre and the Figliulo family

SMU senior Michael Figliulo is following in the footsteps of his grandfather, father, seven uncles, two aunts and two cousins, all of whom have attended the university.

The Burr Ridge, Ill., native was encouraged to attend SMU, but in the end the decision was his own.

"After touring the school and the facilities, I knew it would be a great place because of the small number of students and the incredible amount of resources here," Figliulo said. "It was a great combination."

In November, Figliulo directed his first play at Saint Mary's — something his father, Rob '76, also did as a senior. The hall in which "Found a Peanut" was performed, Figliulo Recital Hall inside Page Theatre, was named after Figliulo's grandfather, Eugene '46.

"The first time I saw it and every time I walk in, I sort of look up there and smile because it seems kind of silly seeing my name up there in gold letters," Michael said of the recital hall.

The choice to attend SMU largely came from the university's strong reputation in the arts.

"I don't know how many southeastern Minnesotans realize what a wonderful facility we have here," said Figliulo, noting that the smaller student population also influenced his decision. "I love small schools. You get so much more attention from the staff."

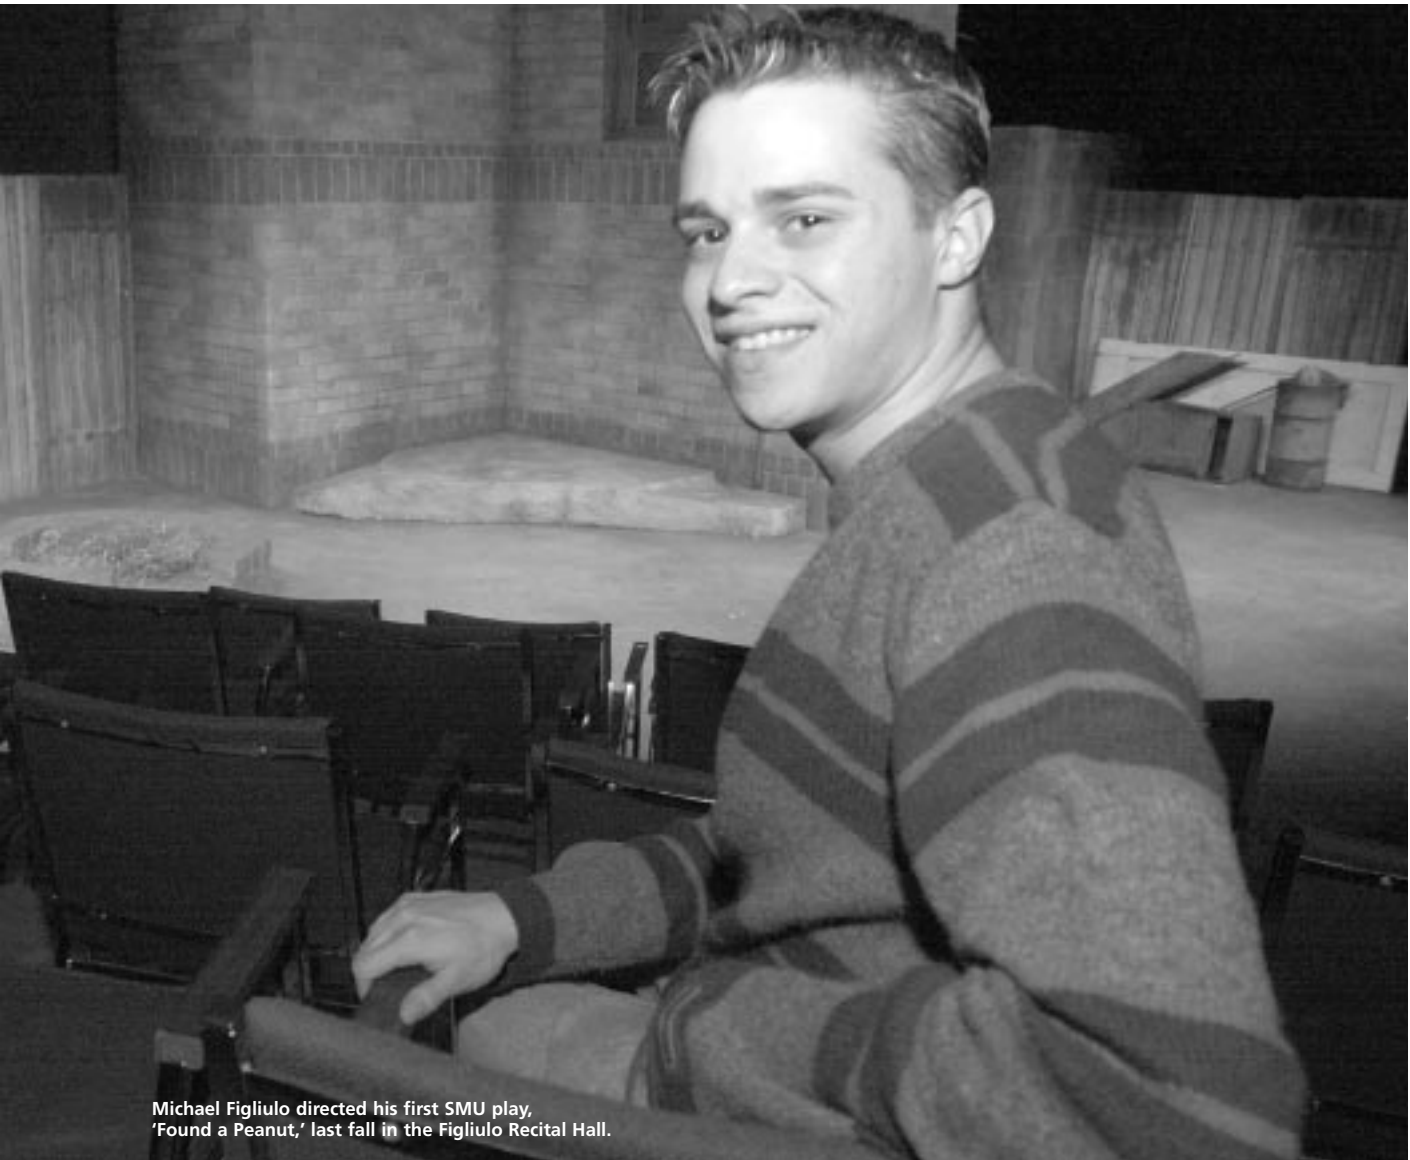

Figliulo has acted in several productions at SMU, but "Found a Peanut" marked his first time in the director's chair.

"It's different," Figliulo admitted. "It's really odd being responsible for so many people, because when you act, you're mainly responsibly for yourself.”

The challenge of calling all the shots gave Figliulo added respect for the hard work it takes behind the scenes to make a performance happen.

“That personally was the most rewarding experience — seeing the interaction between the entire production staff and entire acting staff and how it all comes together to form one play,” he said.

“Found a Peanut” was written by Donald Marguiles who won the 2000 Pulitzer Prize for drama with “Dinner With Friends.” The play was presented by the SMU Department of Theatre Arts as part of its Great Theatre Series.

Figliulo had to present the plays he was considering doing to faculty members and explain why he wanted to do each play. In the end, “Found a Peanut” won out.

“The reason I picked this play is I wanted a little bit of a challenge for myself,” said Figliulo, noting that the actors in the play were all undergrads, ranging in age from 18 to 21, playing the parts of children ages 4 to 14. “It has the elements of comedy and very strong elements of drama, and I thought it would be a great challenge for myself.”

While Figliulo has enjoyed directing, acting still is his first love.

“It’s something I wouldn’t mind doing after school, but I think I’m going to try acting first,” he said.

“Directing is a huge responsibility, and I was lucky enough to have professors guide me along the way. It’d be a little scarier being out in the real world with no one to catch me if I fell.”

Acting may not be the safest career choice, but Figliulo plans to give it a shot after he graduates in May.

“I know it’s going to be difficult, but I have a great family and a great group of teachers here that are definitely there to make sure I get to where I’d like to be,” said Figliulo. “I love making other people smile, and I love making other people think.

“Theater is just a great medium to do that.” 📺

Saint Mary's Magazine asked three members of the SMU academic community to reflect on how the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks have changed the world, this educational institution, and Saint Mary's faculty and students.

3 perspectives on the 'new world order'

THE LASTING IMPACT

The value of liberal arts, social justice

Brother Louis DeThomasis,
FSC, Ph.D., President

Q What do you think of the United States' response to 9-11?

BL I'd say the response has been measured, appropriate, moral and very conscious of collateral damage. I understand the need for political and military action, and I think it is being done right. My hope and confidence is that over time this will go a long way to remedy the situation of terrorism.

Q Do you see a change, on the Winona campus and in the students?

BL I see a significant, deep change in the spirit of the faculty resulting from 9-11. As you might expect with young people (students), they are much more resilient. But I am confident that faculty and staff will help students absorb in a slower way the significant tragedy that we experienced, and how it is going to affect their lives.

Q Is there a sense that terrorism can't happen in Winona?

BL We do have the added dimension of more security here in the heartland of this country, there is no doubt about it.

Q SMU had students in London at the time of the attacks. What was their reaction?

BL We were all upset, and parents were upset. I went to London, but the students were fine. There was quite a bit of news coverage in England, and there was tremendous empathy from the British people. That, our students saw. They tell stories about going to stores and shopkeepers saying, "Oh, you are an American, we are so sorry." Our students were very concerned, but they got over it.

Q How was the U.S. economy affected by these events?

BL The U.S. is in a mild recession, but I think (the terrorist attacks) actually hastened the remedy. Since 9-11, the Congress, the political executive branch, everyone responded with very significant changes in our tax and fiscal policy. The economic future, looking at a crystal ball, is better now than I would have said on Sept. 10. I'm much more positive about the economy.

Q Is there some sort of new world order because of these attacks?

BL I hope there is a new world order. Before Sept. 11, I believe the U.S. politically — even the left wing — was getting very insular. We were comfortable with our prosperity and our safety and we weren't as acute and focused on our role as leader of the free world. After Sept. 11, the U.S. now sees it cannot relinquish its leading role.

Q Do American citizens and the country need to rethink the impression we make on the world?

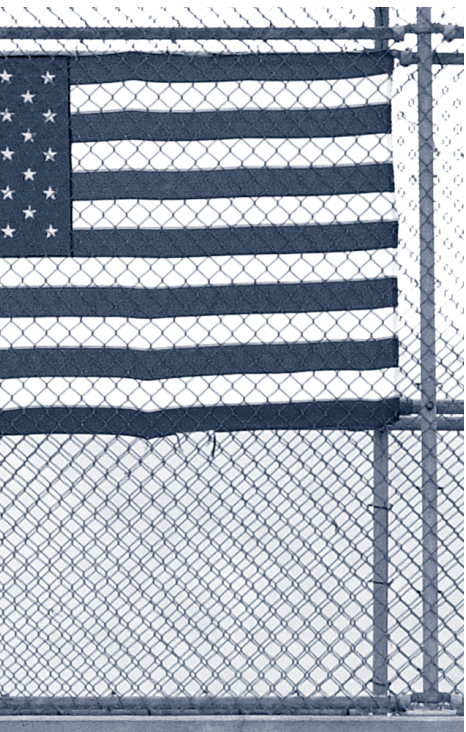

BL It's not just impression, it's a new commitment. Social justice, social sensitivity, social responsibility, we have to be the leaders. We are without a doubt the wealthiest, strongest political entity in the world.

Q But we also need to be aware of how we are perceived.

BL Sure. We always knew we had a bad reputation . . . but we didn't care. We do now.

Q Does having 72 international students and the De La Salle Language Institute on campus help with the broader education of our students?

BL I think that it is a significant help. When foreign students come to SMU they learn something of our culture, gain an understanding, and we are exposed to their culture and learn something from them. And we have to educate them just as we educate our U.S. citizens to the sensitivity they need for social justice.

Q What is the value of SMU actively seeking international students?

BL So that we can truly understand. We are taking the concept of global education seriously. A lot of schools have put on hold their international initiatives. We have increased them. Our reach in Nairobi is there. We are still encouraging students to go to Mexico, London, Italy. More than ever, international students are coming

Students are focusing on international concerns

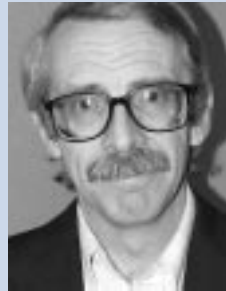

*Jim Rodgers, Ph.D.
Professor of Political Science*

Q Have the events of 9-11 changed how you teach about terrorism?

JR I have been made more acutely aware of the need for students to have and to develop a historical perspective about terrorism, its causes and consequences. Since Sept. 11, I see an ever-greater responsibility for myself as a teacher to help students to explore the history of terrorism and conflict, particularly in the Middle East, so as to put contemporary groups of terrorists — such as those affiliated with Osama bin Laden — in context. I also see a greater emphasis on addressing the complexity and diversity within the Islamic religious faith as being vital to the creation of deeper and more rational student understanding of current terroristic events.

Q How should the university and the nation respond to the attacks?

JR As a university, it is critical that we keep our collective wits about us as we deal with these tragic events. People have to feel comfortable here (and I believe they do) to express their feelings, fears and emotions. We need to listen to these expressions and counsel and comfort in a compassionate, secure way. I believe that this is being done. However, we also need to maintain a calm, comprehensive view of the situation.

Terrorism isn't going to go away tomorrow, or next week, or next year. This is (to borrow President Kennedy's phrase regarding the 20th century struggle against communism)"...a long, twilight struggle." Patience, reasoned discourse, and considerations as to the limits (in this world) of national power must be a part of our university deliberations on the terrorist challenge.

As a nation, the battle against terrorism is apt to dominate the first half of the 21st century as the "Cold War" versus Soviet communism dominated the last half of the 20th century. National will, persistence, flexibility in the use of methods, and the creation of effective, responsible and newly established alliances with other concerned and reliable nations will be vital to our national defense, and to our success in this anti-terrorist effort.

Q What have U.S. citizens learned about our place in the world, and how we are perceived?

JR I hope that the U.S. has begun to understand better the notion of vulnerability in our contemporary world. Since the fall of the Berlin Wall and the collapse of our old nemesis, the Soviet Union, we have been living the economic, social and political "high life." We have had peace and prosperity. We seemed, in the '90s, unbeatable. We need to recognize just how, where, and by what series of tactics we can be hurt as a nation. We definitely need to attend better to "homeland" security and I think we are starting to do that.

Q Have you noticed increased interest in world affairs?

JR Right after the attacks of Sept. 11, there was increased anxiety, sleeplessness and real "edginess" among many of the student groups I saw. There is more calm now. They have begun to be more focused on specific international concerns, but not international relations at large. For example, they want to know more about Afghanistan, Bin Laden, the Taliban. But, their focus seems to be pretty narrow. For them to develop more of a geopolitical perspective will require more coursework, more discussion on campus, and more effort by faculty and students alike to explore connections between events, international linkages and the whole notion of globalization. 🌐 here, and sending our students to other countries is urgent. Vital.

Q How is Saint Mary's positioned to deal with the new political reality?

BL Being a Lasallian institution is what will sustain us in the future, and make our education and our changes and our responses very perfect, very poignant. (After 9-11), rather than making a U-turn or a major shift, what we have to do is refocus and be creative within the university's Lasallian foundation.

The long-term solution is the Lasallian spirit of social justice for all. Unless we are able, as a leader in the free world, to spread support and be creative in our leadership in being socially just, being socially responsible is the only solution to the problem. The military and political strategies that we are pursuing now are not the solution to the problem, they are the necessary tactics to eliminate the terrorists, the individual evildoers. It doesn't address the underlying social question in the world of oppression and poverty. "Lasallian" is our foundation and we have to even be more Lasallian and view it in our curriculum, be more creative.

Q Do you have some examples of how Saint Mary's is doing that?

BL I have met with the president's cabinet and the academic administrators to discuss these very things, and they are asking these questions and trying to concretize this theme throughout the university faculty and staff. We must continue to be creative and refocus our energies. Another big initiative is through our Hendrickson Institute for Ethical Leadership. It's affecting our curriculum, and we continue to bring in people for students and faculty to hear, who are concerned about the ethical development of the young leaders that we are educating.

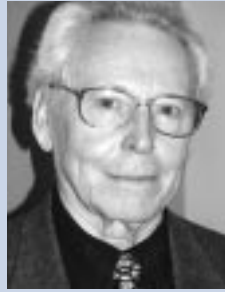

Q So, is the Saint Mary's liberal arts education, plus the added dimension of Lasallian social justice, going to be particularly useful for people who have to deal with the world in the future?

9-11 attacks are unique in American history

*William L. Crozier, Ph.D.,
University Archivist, Professor Emeritus of History*

Q Can you put the events of Sept. 11 into a historical context?

WC The Sept. 11 attacks are unique in American history. More people were killed in the battles of Antietam and Gettysburg but they were soldiers and those events occurred in the midst of a great Civil War. On Sept. 11, a malevolent force attacked symbols of American military and financial might, killing thousands of defenseless people in less than an hour. American spirit and grit eventually won the day, but the nation was shaken. The effects of this cowardly assault on innocents will impact our society for decades.

We learned we were vulnerable to grave destruction by a determined diabolical foe. Our vaunted technologies, security and information systems were unable to protect the nation. Yet the ordinary working class Americans who best represent our nation's values prevailed. As a result of the attack a new respect for these ordinary Americans replaced the nation's obsession with the superficial lives of celebrities. Unfortunately, this will not last — unless we all accept a personal responsibility to address the social, political and moral challenges of a new era.

Q Is 9-11 comparable to any other historic event?

WC Those who were old enough to remember immediately thought of Pearl Harbor, but the comparison is not appropriate. Although the element of surprise was similar, in 1941 we knew who the enemy was and the final outcome was not in doubt for long. We are astonished that so many people hate the American way of life and are determined to destroy it. We now know that many of our presumed friends teach their children anti-Americanism and are sympathetic with the motives of the accursed fiends who carried out this attack.

For the first time since the early 19th century our nation is vulnerable to potentially devastating attacks. Britain and Canada remain our steadfast allies. Germany is supportive and a new relationship is developing between America and Russia.

Q What are the long-lasting effects on New York City, the nation, and the world?

WC We are vulnerable as a nation and individually. We must respond as a nation and individually. Institutions such as democracy, freedom of movement and basic individual civil rights are in jeopardy if we do not destroy the forces of terrorism and replace the roots of hatred for America with policies and actions that include the concerns of those nations and peoples who perceive us as evil.

We must share our great wealth with poorer nations and their people; assisting them to develop social and economic institutions that provide their people with education, work and a decent standard of living. As a Catholic institution we should pay more attention to implementing the social teachings of the Church. Individually, we should take a more active part in political and social action. 🙏

BL The justification of the liberal arts historically has been knowledge for the sake of knowledge. Lasallian liberal arts education always said that was not enough. After Sept. 11, we now have confirmation that it's not enough. A Lasallian liberal arts education is knowledge for the sake of knowledge — and socially responsible action. 🙏

"The long-term solution is the Lasallian spirit of social justice for all."

So much has already been written about the tragic events of Sept. 11, 2001. This article will not dwell on the fact that our country has fundamentally changed, but rather we will take a look at how the World Wide Web may have finally “come of age” as a primary delivery system for news and information.

On Sept. 11, the Public Information office at SMU went into “crisis management mode.” Our website was updated several times that day to display announcements of class schedule changes and eventually the cancellation of classes on our Twin Cities campus. Our “Inside SMU” page, viewed primarily by students, faculty and staff, was also updated. A photo of the first reaction on the Winona campus (a U.S. flag and sign hung from the top of LaSalle Hall) was posted on Inside SMU minutes after they appeared. We also were in contact via email with members of our international community to keep them updated on the events of the day.

Anyone who tried to log on to websites such as CNN.com or ABCNews.com, found that access to most of the major news and information sites was practically impossible in the hours following the attacks on New York City and Washington, D.C. This overwhelming

The screenshot shows a web browser window with the URL <http://www.smumn.edu/convocation/faq.html>. The page features a navigation menu on the left with links for Home, Features, History, Speech, Speeches, and Photo Gallery. The main content area is divided into three sections, each with a photo and two buttons: 'Hear QuickTime' and 'Hear RealAudio'. The first section is titled 'AMERICA THE BEAUTIFUL' by Dr. Patrick O'Shea, Music Department. The second section is titled 'PRESIDENT'S SPEECH' by Brother Louis DeThomasis. The third section is titled 'PANEL DISCUSSION' featuring Laurie Hale, Assistant to VP for Financial Affairs. The browser's address bar and status bar are visible at the top and bottom of the window.

Audio clips, photos and video excerpts from the Winona campus-wide convocation were posted on the SMU website 24 hours after the event. The information was brought online the morning of Sept. 19, 2001 and our international community was able to see and hear the events soon after they occurred.

desire to have instant access to critical information 24/7 via the Web is proof that the world now looks to the Internet as a fundamental means of communication.

Our biggest challenge, at least technically, came one week after Sept. 11. Brother President Louis DeThomasis called for a campus-wide convocation on Sept. 18 here in Winona. A few days before the event, we were asked by the president if the SMU website could be used to broadcast excerpts of the convocation to our international students and staff. We made the decision to have first audio clips and photos, followed by video excerpts, posted on the SMU site within 24 hours after the event. The information was brought on-line the morning of Sept. 19 and our international community was able to see and hear the events soon after they occurred. Alumni who are members of our email database (www.smumn.edu/alumni/) also were notified of the convocation (www.smumn.edu/convocation/) and many expressed their gratitude for the opportunity to view the reaction from their alma mater.

As we go forward in this brave new world of instant information, we see many exciting ways for our website to bring you up-to-date sights and sounds. Homecoming highlights, Founder's Day, graduations and sporting events are but a few of the subjects which can and will be made available. (Don't forget our Winona WebCam is live day and night – www.smumn.edu/webcam/)

In order for us to better serve you, we ask that you help us by answering a few quick questions. We have set up a short on-line survey at www.smumn.edu/ideas.html. Your answers to these questions will give us a much better idea of how you use your computer to receive information, and also what types of content you want SMU to provide. I hope that you will take a moment to provide us with this invaluable information. With your help, we will see the SMU website continue to change and grow to serve you better. 📧

Cardinal gets a new look

The Saint Mary's University Cardinal has received a facelift.

The new Cardinal — a sleeker, more determined-looking mascot — was unveiled by the SMU athletic department this fall.

"I think the redesigned Cardinal better represents the student-athlete at Saint Mary's," said SMU athletic director Chris Kendall '79. "The new Cardinal shows the focus, commitment and intensity that Saint Mary's athletes bring to the competitive arena."

Kendall said the athletic department will phase out the old Cardinal logo over the next year, but that logo will still be available to be used by other SMU departments.

The new Cardinal logo depicts a bird with its arms grasping the letters "SMU," but according to Kendall, "there's much more to it than just a change to a 'tougher-looking' Cardinal."

The overall appearance, especially the Cardinal's firm grasp of the "SMU," symbolizes the athletic department's commitment to the values and mission of Saint Mary's University. The eye portrays Saint Mary's focus on the present, while not forgetting about the past or the future. The mouth demonstrates SMU's intensity, determination and commitment toward achieving its goals. The overall boldness of the logo represents the student-athlete's courage, strength and devotion to Saint Mary's University.

"The athletic department and administration have worked together on this project, and I'm very happy with the outcome," Kendall said. "I'm confident this new Cardinal will represent Saint Mary's University well." 🦅

GOLF*CONFERENCE:

Men 7th, Women 7th

BRIEFLY: Sophomore

Eric Thom led the way for the Cardinal men as they moved up one spot from eighth to seventh at the MIAC Championships. Thom carded a pair of rounds in the 70s, shooting 79-78 to finish 15th overall. ... Thom was the team's scoring leader all season, finishing with a 78.1 stroke average through SMU's 12 rounds, with a one-over-par 72 and a three-over 73: his — and the Cardinals' — best rounds of the season. ...

Sophomore Kyle Sabot averaged 80.5, including a team-leading 237 total (76-78-83) at the Twin Cities Classic. ... On the women's side, sophomore Kris Klimmek and freshman Ellen Berndt shared team-leading honors with 91.5 stroke averages. ... Berndt fired rounds of 83-88, and Klimmek added scores of 94-90 to lead SMU to its seventh-place showing at the MIAC Championships. ... Berndt's 11-over 83 at the conference tournament was the team's low round of the season.

Jill Hocking named Minnesota's 2001 NCAA Woman of the Year

Spring graduate Jill Hocking '01 received quite an honor in August when she was named the 2001 NCAA Woman of the Year for the state of Minnesota.

An accounting major, Hocking — named the 2001 Verizon College Division Academic All-America of the Year — graduated summa cum laude from Saint Mary's on May 16. She is also a member of Delta Epsilon Sigma national Catholic honor society.

The NCAA Woman of the Year Award honors outstanding female student-athletes who have excelled in academics, athletics and community leadership. This year's 51 state winners represent 14 sports, with 29 student-athletes chosen from Division I, nine from Division II and 13 from Division III.

Hocking, a first baseman/pitcher, helped lead the Cardinals to a fourth-place finish in the 2001 NCAA Division III national championships, as well as a national crown as a junior in 2000. A two-time Verizon Academic All-America College Division first-teamer, Hocking appeared in all 44 games for the Cardinals, who went 2-2 in their second straight national tournament appearance and finished the season with a 36-8 overall record. Hocking led the Cardinals in virtually every offensive category, including batting average (.454), hits (59), RBIs (46), doubles (13), triples (5), home runs (4), total bases (94), slugging percentage (.723) and on-base percentage (.517). On the mound, Hocking — a four-time All-American (first team in 2001 and 2000, second team in 1999 and third team in 1998) and SMU's outstanding female athlete and outstanding female scholar-athlete the last two seasons — posted an 18-6 record, with a team-leading 0.61 ERA.

The Woman of the Year honor is just the latest in a long line of post-season accolades for Hocking, who earned her Academic All-America of the Year selection in early June, and was also named to the All-American and All-Midwest Region teams for the fourth straight season. Hocking also earned her fourth consecutive All-Minnesota Intercollegiate Athletic Conference honor, and was selected to the Seed 2 Regional All-Tournament team. f

Saint Mary's University...

A great place to learn.
A great place to visit, enjoy and get involved.

Tom Callen '70,
National Alumni
Board President

One often looks back to determine how they got where they are today. Certainly parents, a spouse, a strong belief in God's will all play major roles.

What about education? Ask Christian Brothers what is the most important thing they do and often times, you will hear education, education, education.

What makes Saint Mary's a great place to learn? For me, it lies in the intangibles – the “little things” that help make a difference in everyday activities. At Saint Mary's, you find the courage to believe in yourself, you pick up a certain “street sense” – a practical awareness of what is going on around you and how to react, and you develop a Christian maturity leading not only to a stronger belief in God, but also in giving back to the community.

There is always something evolving on campus that makes a visit back to Saint Mary's a memorable event. Homecoming 2002, June 14-16, will be a great time to come back, enjoy a weekend away and get involved. The Performance Center will be the setting for a new Friday night “Alumni Gathering.” You could not ask for a better place to meet former classmates, teachers, and friends. You will take great pride in the sheer beauty of this wonderful building. Hors d'oeuvres and refreshments, along with entertainment throughout the evening, will be provided.

Take a tour of the many campus additions, nominate your fellow classmates for future Alumni Awards, attend the Saturday picnic, come to the Alumni Mass or enjoy the Awards Reception and hear the moving stories of your distinguished fellow alumni.

Outside of Homecoming, other ways to get involved include inquiring about how to participate in the alumni “Meet the Pros” day. This growing event lets students of all years hear alumni discuss how they got where they are today and the role Saint Mary's University has played.

Visit the alumni website and see what events are upcoming in your area. Give us suggestions on how we can better serve your needs.

Inquire with the Alumni Relations office about how to join the Mentorship Program, or how your company can participate in an internship program for SMU students.

To quote a recent book I read, (using a little leeway which I am sure the author would not mind), “Saint Mary's University is the kind of place where the miracle of touching the hearts of students and alumni occurs directly, deeply and daily across the board and at all levels.”
